She stood motionless. She will to give an authentic picture of the have history to tell her children. The King stirred uneasily, he opened his eyes. They rested on the Prince. They did not move. It seemed himself to his friends. Even before he greeted his mother the Queen, the Prince knew that his father had been delirious for days when he was not in a state of coma largely induced by powerful drugs. There was very little hope at the Palace in these days when the doctors knew the king must die if they did not drain the abscess, but con- sidered him so weak that he would probably never come out of the an- aesthetic if they did not use the knife. Only the Queen, whether or not she realized the situation, never seemed to lose heart or confidence in her husband's eventual recovery. It was not intended that the Prince should see his father on that night on which his race over more than 6,000 land and sea miles ended. The Queen told him that if he did enter the sick room he would not be recognized, but the Prince begged to be allowed just to tip-toe to the bedside. And he was allowed to do while Sir Stanley Hewitt, re- mained by the half-open door of the royal sickroom. The Prince—not ten minutes after he had left the special train looking down on his father. It was a meeting that all the resources of the British Empire and three other nations had been mobilized to bring about—before it was too late. Yet it must have seemed to the Prince as good as too late. The King for days unconscious or delirious, had stood looking at father. The world knows the result. What has been recounted above is true; it is not a tale of sentiment. There may have been no connection between the King's recognition of his heir and the improvement that set in at once; but there can be no doubt that when this story is generally known a new romance will be added to the legends of the British royal house. "Juanita" Roll call was answered with riddles. It was decided at this meeting to hold whist parties every week for the purpose of increasing the institute fund. The first party will be held at the home of Mrs. J. A. Macdonald, Dec. 28. A very enjoyable feature of the meeting was the reading of a paper "The Art of Living" by the President. The next meeting place was not definitely stated. Any important business may be taken up and discussed at the whist parties. The roll call for the next meeting will be answered with "My Favorite Recipe." The meeting closed with the singing of "For He is a Jolly Good Fellow." After the meeting a delicious lunch was served by the hostess. The remainder of the evening was spent in music, singing and card playing.

AN INSTITUTE CONCERT

A most entertaining and interest- ing program was carried out in the school hall, Heatherdale on Wednes- day evening last, the event which was given to the public under the auspices of the Women's Institute was certainly as successful as that worthy and helpful organization could desire. A nominal entrance fee and the sale of home made candy netted a comfortable sum for the treasury. The program centered around a lecture given on the occasion by Rev. D. M. Sinclair, M. A., who took as his subject "The clans and the Ceilidh and their place in the Scot- tish Highlands of two hundred years ago. The different clans under their several chiefs were a law unto themselves and eked out a precarious existence in the hill-top gneiss of this romantic country. The Ceilidh was a sort of mutual improvement society where weird and fanciful stories were related ga- gory, to pass away the long even- ings. There were no books or newspa- pers to read and it was the speaker's opinion that much of the stuff that passes for literature today is scarce- ly less edifying than that which pre- vailed in the hill country of Scot- land at this early period. The lecture throughout elicited a thoughtful hearing and at the close the relation of a gaelic story, a pro- duct of the Ceilidh gave much whole hearted merriment to the large audience present. The rest of the program which follows was also splendid. The as- sistance of the Brooklyns friends and Mr. Allan Cameron of Caledo- nia in conjunction with the home talent put over the top a fine even- ing's entertainment. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered all who contributed to the evening's pleas- ure and presented by the chairman Mr. Allan McDonald. This vote was suitably supported by W. A. Mc- Phee, John A. Campbell, John Y. McDonald, D. M. Nicholson and S. M. Martin, when "God Save the King" dismissed the audience. Opening chorus, Juanita by six girls. Solo, Where Has Scotland Found Her Fame, W. E. PRESENTATION

A pleasant social evening was spent at Sunnyside on Nov. 13, the occasion being a presentation of two beautiful chairs to Mr. and Mrs. D. B. McNeill who are moving to Miscouche. Mr. W. D. McDonald occupied the chair. He called on J. D. McLellan to read the follow- ing address:
 To Mr. and Mrs. D. B. McNeill and family:
 Meetings of friends are symbols of pleasure but a cloud of gloom rests over us tonight as we are assembled here to bid you farewell. Regret that you are leaving our community and moving to a new home. Man's success is chiefly measured by the resources of the land. Rev. D. M. Sinclair, M. Egypt is certainly a wonderful country, and so varied in its interest for stran- gers. We have been here but a few days and expect to return to Can- ada in January. In the meantime, we start tomorrow on a two days' trip up the Nile, an experience which we look forward to with very keen interest. Our itinerary brings us to Jerusalem for Christmas and we expect to spend a month in the Holy Land." Accompanying the letter was a colored postal card of the Pyra- mids, which are ten miles from Cairo. Mrs. Richards states: "We drove there in an auto and then mounted camels for the ride around the Pyramids and Sphinx. It is beautiful summer weather here."

URGENT MORE BARLEY ON CANADIAN FARMS

Higher feed value than oats— ideal winter crop— seed important according to many of our agricul- tural authorities Canadian farmers would be well advised to grow more barley, particularly in the place of feed oats. The Ontario Depart- ment of Agriculture, for instance, in a recent bulletin points out that barley yields from 15 to 20 per cent more pounds of grain per acre than oats and nine per cent more digestible food material. It is further asserted that if one third of the total acreage at present devoted to oats and barley sown alone or to- gether was sown to straight barley farmers would be richer by 185,000,000 pounds of grain or the equivalent of 6,000,000 bushels of oats or approximately $2,000,000. No more ground would be required and no more overhead to get this additional amount of feed. And while this il- lustration refers to Ontario, it is ap- plicable in every Province where grain is grown for feed. It is admitted to be the ideal nurse crop for any clover or alfalfa as it does not spread out much or lodge like oats. It helps in the control of weeds because, ripen- ing earlier than wild oats, mustard, cockle and similar pests it is cut be- fore these other plants get a chance to spread their seeds about the field. But there is barley and barley and with this crop as with all others it is important to use good seed and have a clean field to get into the maling or seed market, two outlets in addition to feed which are al- ways at the command of the good barley grower, good, graded seed of a straight variety is essential, au- thorities in these lines point out. The average run of some two rowed, and some six rowed barley, liberally mixed with oats, will not do for maling purposes and neither will it do for seed. Such a mixture will never amount to any more than feed, and when sown, will not pro- duce as much feed, as the Ontario Department of Agriculture points out, as barley of a straight variety. For the maling trade any standard variety of six rowed barley, such as O. A. C. No. 21, is recommended.
