The Girl Who Had No Chance

By MARION RUBINCAM

THE STRANGE EVENING

Chapter 96

Ruth felt so nervous about seeing Tim in the evening that she could scarcely eat the dinner Marie served her in her rooms. Then she did something at which she always smiled when she thought it over in later years. All the conventionalism to which she had been trained told her it was wrong to see Tim, since he was married and since she still cared for him. All her common sense told her that this was the very thing she could do—for then she might become acquainted again with the real Tim, and she might learn whether it was love, or the remnants of a youthful illusion.

For Tim had changed greatly, and so had she—and she knew she must, for her future peace of mind find out more about this new man. This she could not do while Myra was around to monopolize the talk.

But she was still so much afraid of the personal element, so much worried by the conventions—that she deliberately put on one of her old dresses that was not becoming and did her hair in the old-time way, instead of the softer, more becoming method that Marie had taught her. At least she was not making herself deliberately attractive, she thought.

Tim came about 8 o'clock. He had been at a boxing match that afternoon, and had gone to dinner with "the fellows," some of the men in the office, he explained, and he felt rather rumpled and mussed.

"It's a shame to call on a lady when I'm so towsled," he apologized.

But Ruth smiled and said it was all right. She did not say that she liked to see his dark hair thrown about. In the old days Tim's careless dressing had been one of his charms. It made him so much more lik ea small boy, a quality that had always appealed strongly to Ruth.

"It's like the old days, isn't it?" Tim asked once. "Only we should have the open fire instead of steam radiators, and that rug with the hole in it, in place of your grand fixings here."

Ruth did not answer. The old evenings by the open fire were such a precious memory to her that it hurt to have them referred to in this casual cheerful manner.

"We used to read together at lot," she said finally, getting up and going to the table where some books lay. "Tim, have you read this? It's just out—I'm sending it home—to some friends—" this last came out after a slight hesitation.

"Nope," Tim answered cheerfully "I don't get much time to read."

"This will be the novel of the season," Ruth went on. "It's really worth while. I've some new war books too—"

"You've got a lot of highbrow stuff here too," Tim had also gotten up and stood now by the table. "Maybe I ought to read more. Myra says that after I've had a full day in the office my head is too tired to read, so she takes me to movies. Sometimes I read a magazine through."

The talk dropped. The girl had never realized how great a part books had played in their lives at home. Or was it that? She tried the war as a topic—everyone talked little else, she found. Tim knew much less than she, and cared nothing. She tried the theatre—but Myra hated the trip down-town, so usually they went to movies, Tim answered. She made various other efforts—Tim had lost interest in her work at home, her own mind was full of it.

There were awkward silences Eventually they drifted into a chat about people they knew, presently they were talking of themselves. This was the one thing Ruth wanted to avoid, but as she remembered it later, it seemed the only topic left, where she and Tim could meet on a common ground.

"You don't say much about yourself," Tim remarked once. "Got any dark secrets, Ruth? Myra says you're looking so pretty and fashionable she's sure you've got all the beaux of the town."

"Beaux"—it was the one word Ruth hated more than any other—she hated it and the vulgar meaning attached to it. It seemed to imply sorts of common things—"sighing" and "spooning," the deliberate fascination of any man for the sake of one's personal vanity, empty, silly talk! She hated Myra for having used the word and Tim for having repeated it.

"Don't look so mad," Tim said, pulling out his pipe and getting it ready to smoke. "I only wondered whether you were engaged. You are pretty, you know."

"Does everyone have to get married?" Ruth answered, her tones freezing cold.

"No," Tim answered, cheerfully unabashed. "I did. I didn't want to, but I guess it was a good thing."

Ruth's anger fairly flamed. She turned and faced Tim.

"Do you think that's a fair way to speak of your wife?"

"Maybe not. Myra wouldn't care. She knows—"

Ruth suddenly found she did not want to hear what Myra knew. She sank down on the couch.

"Please go home, Tim," she said. "I know I'm rude to ask, but I don't feel well, I feel—very badly."

All apologies at once for not having noticed she looked ill, Tim put on his coat and said goodnight. Ruth went into her room before he was even out of the apartment. She slipped into her negligee, and pulled the pins from her hair, to ease her headache.

Her outer door opened and, thinking it was Marie, she went into the living room again. Tim stood in her doorway—his hand on the knob of the still open door.

Tomorrow—The Crisis

CAR TURNS TURTLE AND BREAKS W. J. CAMPBELL'S ARM IN TWO PLACES

Yesterday afternoon a party consisting of A. W. Adams, Wm. J. and S. Campbell and Elmer Cole, all residents, on the Santa Anna Road, northeast of town, started out to take a little ride around the country in Mr. Adams' Sheridan car, and started for Tres Pinos.

Winding around the pleasing country roads of that section of the country, the party finally came to a road that leads from the Santa Anna valley into the Tres Pinos road, and made the turn at a reasonable speed. There happened to be a lot of loose gravel at the intersection and in making the turn the car skidded, rolled over on its side back on its four wheels, the fenders smashed, the top demolished, and presenting a generally dissolute appearance, but with the determined air of the marine who wanted to know of the commanding officer, 'where do we go from here?"

It was soon discovered that Wm. Campbell had received a severe injury to his arm, while none of the others were in the least the worse for the upset.

Hastily lowering the cover and making things look as shipshape as possible, the car was headed for the Hazel Hawkins Hospital, where Dr. L. C. Hull, assisted by Jeff Hull, temporarily reduced the fracture and made Mr. Campbell as comfortable as possible under the circumstances.

This morning an X-ray of the injured limb was taken by Miss Drew and disclosed that the two bones of the arm had been fractured. With this photograph to guide him Dr. Hull had no trouble in reducing the fracture correctly, and in a few weeks Mr. Campbell will be able to direct the hard work on the farm with either hand.

The above is taken from a California paper. Messrs. Wm. J. and Stanford Campbell, also Elmer Cole all belong to Long River, in this province, the two latter having left here only a few weeks ago.

REPORTS OF WOMEN'S INSTITUTES OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

The Beauty Of Health

Newspapers and magazines are devoting columns to magic or overnight beautifiers. There is a beauty in health that is far more attractive to men than mere regularity of features or a made-up complexion. Health should be the first essential of women who want to win and hold admiration, respect and love. At the first indication of ill health as indicated by dark circles under the eyes, a sallow complexion, headaches, backache, pain in the side, nervousness, irritability and melancholia, women should take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, the standard remedy for woman's ills, which has been proven to help 98 out of every 100 women who try it.

EASTERN WISDOM RECOGNIZED ABROAD

Bard of the Northeast wintry clime,
It's hard to get those words to rhyme.
When I came home one day at noon,
And found ahead of me a poem,
I let my imagination stray
From Somerville to Savage Bay,
Where Jimmie Bill holds high-handed sway,
And does things in the Liberal way.
Methought I stood on Savage strand
Where once 'twas drifting, shifting sand,
Or would you call it sinking sand?
"The scene was changed," as Scott would say,
Where once 'twas barren, bleak and wild,
From Elisha's Hill to Crow-bush side.
Now was covered with verdure green,
While rows of trees grew in between,
Which burdened with vegetation rare,
Whose rich perfume filled the air.
Reminded me of that land of old,
"O'er which milk and honey flowed."
"Still the half has not been told."
As Esther said in days of old.
Where once had been that dreaded bar,
Now swiftly steams a man-of-war,
'Midst numerous yachts of steam and sail;
Who had come long distance for to say,
We've sailed o'er lovely Savage Bay.
And on the Beach in little bands,
Play happy children in the sand.
While comely dames with distinguished airs,
Discussed who's who. and where;
And watched the girls with forms divine,
To bathing in the chilly brine;
In bathing suits of every hue,
From Wilson pink to Harding blue.
I'll tell the world they looked right cute,
In their natty, naughty one piece suit.
And as I gazed in great surprise,
At those wonderful changes before my eyes;
My mind reverted with a rush,
To the cause of it all, the (Liberal brush.)
'Twas brush that held this shifting sand,
'Twas brush that made this Beach so grand.
'Twas brush that cut this channel steep,
Down to the bowels of the mighty deep.
And when the Liberal Anthems ring,
In praise of "Engineer" and "King,"
Let joy be not confined or hushed
In honor of the hooter and brush,
For in their own humble way,
They have won many a Liberal fray.

Bard of the Northeast wintry clime,
In praise of you I'll end my rhyme,
Cease your unprofitable toil,
As tiller of a meagre soil,
And hie, you! to some sunny clime,
Where flowers and heat and lots of wine,
Would cause inspiration to o'er you sweep,
Like billows of the raging deep,
Your writings in this happy state,
Would place you well among the great,
While all the world your praise would sing,
You'd be the Honored Guest of Kings,
Beloved, admired, possessed of fame,
Which leaves behind an Undying Name.
Somerville, Mass. [illegible]

Question?

Who will win the prizes in the Sunmaid Raisin Bread Baking competition? Now being put on.

Answer.

The parties who use GOLD BOND FLOUR to bake their trial loaf.

Why?

Because GOLD BOND FLOUR carries the highest percentage of gluten that can be had, which gives it the strength to raise to the lightest point.

Because it contains all the elements of the high patent flour's and retains all of the natural nutty flavor of the wheat.

Because it is the whitest and purest flour that can be made, and is manufactured from the best Manitoba hard spring wheat, on the shortest and most modern milling system in the world.

These are the three main essentials in good baking FLOUR, and will produce a loaf that will command the respect of the Judges. Use GOLD BOND and win the prize.
