A Morning Smile

RATHER SELFISH

The old couple sat quietly before the fireplace. At length the white-haired husband turned to his wife. "What are you thinking about, Mary?" he asked.

"Well, John," she replied, "I have been thinking about our long life together, and how it can't go on forever like this, and how soon one of us will have to go."

"Yes," said John, "but there's no use in worrying about it."

"Oh, I wasn't worrying," said Mary. "I was just thinking that when it did happen I'd like to go to California to live."

Dorothy Dix Says—

WISHY-WASHY MATE FORCES WIFE INTO DIVORCE, BUSINESS

Pretty Girl Undermines Youth's Love for Mate, Baby Despite Agreeable Home Conditions

DEAR MISS DIX: I have been married three years and have a very fine wife and a baby daughter who means more to me than anything else, but I have fallen in love with a young lady and can't get her out of my mind. Maybe I don't want to as much as I think I do. My wife and I have talked of getting a divorce, but if I do I don't know whether the girl will have me or not. She says it is my duty to stay with my baby and wife. That is right, but why stay together and be miserable?

I understand that if my wife and I separate it will change my draft classification, but this doesn't bother me, for if I could see this other girl while I am here I will be satisfied. But, on the other hand, I still care for my wife and I love my baby a bit more than I want to admit. Please tell me what to do.

A MIXED UP HUSBAND.

DEAR MISS DIX: I have seen the letter that my husband has written to you. Here is my side of the case: My husband says he loves me, but he says he loves this other girl just as much that he can't forget her. Now I love him more than life itself, but I don't want a man who wants someone else. I don't believe it is his fault that my husband has been attracted to an unstable girl. I am as good-looking as I was when we were married. I am a good housekeeper and manager. I had a college education, so I am not a dumbbell.

I can make my own living. I hate the thought of separation and I know that divorce is hard on the child, but living with a philandering husband will make our home a hell on earth. I have tried to reason with my husband, but he says he is so mixed up he doesn't know what he wants. However, I have asked him to make up his mind, for if he wants a divorce the sooner, the better, so I can go to work and try to forget him.

My husband's parents love me as much as they do their own children, and if he leaves me they will never forgive him. What should we do?

A WORRIED WIFE.

ACCURATE PICTURE OF MODERN FICKLE HUSBAND

ANSWER: If these two letters from a husband and a wife don't present the modernistic attitude towards divorce, I don't know anything that does. Here we have the picture of a wishy-washy husband who is typical of about nine-tenths of the philanderers who are so emotionally unstable that he doesn't know even what he wants in a woman. He has no fault to find with his wife. He really loves her in his way. Only he wants a change. And he isn't even sure that he will like the other woman any better when he gets her than he does his current mate.

There are a lot of men like that. They belong in the same class with the men who are always trading in their automobiles for a new model because they have seen one with some sort of new gadget or whose paint they like better, but they certainly do hate to part with the old one. And when they get the new one they don't like it any better than they did the old one, and the swap has cost them a lot of money.

It is impossible for that type of man to be faithful to any woman, no matter if she were Miss America and possessed every charm and virtue on earth. He wanders from one to another and in and out of the divorce court and the marriage license bureau until he has had his fill, and then he chases skirts any longer. Polygamy is this kind of man's dish, and it is a pity he can't live in a country where husbands can have as large an assortment of wives as they do of neckties.

The wife, in this case, is a strong, sensible woman who takes a sane view of her husband and her situation. Evidently she perceives his weakness and knows he will never be faithful to her, but for some reason or other she still loves him. With Audrey she says "a poor thing, but mine own." But she doesn't propose to go partners in him with other ladies.

So she puts him on the spot and wants him to make his choice. But the poor weakling can't do it because he doesn't know which one he likes the better. And in the end the wife will have to decide the question of whether she would rather have a part-time husband, or a divorce and a full-time job. And my guess is that she will get tired of forgoing and take the job.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: My son, who is under draft age, talked me into letting him enlist in the Naval Reserve. I understood he would be in training school for quite some time before being sent away, but he has already been moved to Pearl Harbor. I am told there is a Federal penalty attached to falsifying one's age when enlisting, and my husband is determined to enforce this and try to have him brought back or not. My husband, the boy's stepfather, is in the Navy also and says leave him alone, but anxiety about him is about to kill me. I am a sick woman anyway, and worrying over him is making me lose all I have gained after a year of building up. I can't eat or sleep.

The boy writes that he is very happy and alright and likes it. He says he hated going to school and now doing just what he wants to do. What would you do if you were me?

MRS. N. H.

MOTHER SHOULD BE PROUD OF SON IN NAVY

ANSWER: To do nothing. If you make any move to get him out of the Navy you will make great trouble for him. The boy must have a lot of grit and stamina to do what he has done, so I think you can trust him to take care of himself.

DEAR MISS DIX: I have a daughter of 21 who insists on getting married to a boy who is about to be called to the Service. I have tried every way in the world to persuade her to wait, but she says that if I don't give my consent she will run away and marry anyway. She has known this boy for a long time and he is a very fine chap. No objection to that score. But people tell me I shouldn't allow her to marry now. Have I done right in agreeing to it?

WORRIED MOTHER.

ANSWER: How can you help it when she is 21 and doesn't need your consent. All you can do under such circumstances is to say "God bless you," and hope for the best.

COAT OF SEASON IS SLIM, SEMI-FITTED
NEW YORK — Bergdorf Goodman's coat of the fall season is slender and semi-fitted at the back. It was noted in the store's fall fashion showing in three versions — hunter's green over a rose dress, black with ermine at the neck, and again in black with around the upper portion of the sleeves. While the designers turned away from the vogue for sequins,

All That Glitters

By Frances Parkinson Keys

CHAPTER IX

Among her fellow travellers on the Conte de Savoia, Zoe had found Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Baker of Oakland, California, especially congenial. They were young and bent on winning every possible ounce of enjoyment from their first trip to Europe. Without being aggressive they had made Zoe understand it would mean a great deal to them if she would accept them as paying passengers in her car from Naples to Paris. She had gladly extended the invitation and, as an afterthought, she had asked Miss Arnold if he would care to make up a fourth in the group. He had roundly refused. Zoe had good company on ship-board that he regarded the opportunity of prolonging their period of informal companionship as too good to be missed.

Paris was emptied of officialdom when they first reached there, for everyone was still out of town on the long Christmas holiday. Giles had time to accompany Zoe while she did her first sightseeing and her first shopping, and to take her in the evenings to dine and dance at the Cafe de Paris and Maxim's. She wanted to see everything that was listed in the guide-book she had bought before she met Giles on the coast, and she wanted to buy clothes.

She found she needed her new clothes as soon as she secured them, for people began to drift back to town soon after the first of January; presently the season was in full swing, and Zoe had more invitations than she knew what to do with. By this time she was comfortably quartered in her own "digs" in a little house on the rue du Cherche Midi.

For years Giles had taken it for granted that Isabel was the one woman in his life, and that since she was unattainable, he would never marry. Now for the first time he began to ask himself whether he would not be better off married.

GOOD LOOKING TWO PIECE For the Mother-to-be

If a baby's on the schedule, how about the two-piece with the straight-hanging jacket top? So many girls prefer this type for its kindly camouflage, disguising the figure, without any loss of youthful style. Make it in a pretty pastel wool or in a gay color to cheer you up. A little lace edging at the collar will give it an added touch if you are not the tailored type.
