"Your Son Will—

The Sturton estates were run on model lines, Sir Charles was enterprising; not afraid of new ways. While other large landowners were forced to split up their possessions, Sir Charles weathered the storms of the post-war depression because he had splendid organization and satisfied tenants. He well-equipped farms, communal facilities for livestock, marketing, and finance were the envy of other large landowners. Now he was looking ahead to still more extensive developments.

"John has qualified by scholarship for the Secondary School at Brackham, I hear," he said to the garage man's wife. Mrs. Morris nodded. "Mr. Foster seems to think a lot of him, and schoolmasters aren't easily pleased." Your boy came out top of the list, Foster tells me. I'm not surprised. Well, I am going to ask you to let me do something for the boy. I want you to let me take care of his education.

"There's no fear of him not getting a fair chance at Brackham, sir. My husband is well able to stand the expense. "There you go," Sir Charles laughed. "Standing on your confounded dignity! I won't have it. I know what'll happen. John will go on to matriculation and finish there." "Good enough an education for a garage-boy? To care for aeroplanes if they come." (To be Continued)

1859-1944 PETROLEUM'S 85th BIRTHDAY

Oil's Contribution to Man

In 1859 a group of far-sighted men drilled down into the earth near Titusville, Pennsylvania. At a little over sixty-nine feet, their drill struck oil . . . and thus, in the little wooden shacks that sheltered the pioneer Drake Well, the petroleum industry was born.

Through eighty-five years of progress, new generations of oil men have pushed their drills almost five miles down below the surface, stepped up petroleum production from forty to over 4,500,000 barrels a day on this continent. And on this tidal wave of "liquid power" rich gifts have floated to mankind . . . the modern car, truck and airplane . . . oil-heated homes and oil-driven ships . . . the farmer's tractor . . . asphalt roads that unite the nation . . . lubricants and other petroleum products that have enabled industry to produce better goods at lower cost, for more people. Today, as essential "ammunition" on our fighting fronts, petroleum is making its finest gift—victory in a bitter war to preserve our way of life and ensure our future.

As Canada's pioneer and leader in the field of petroleum, Imperial Oil Limited has contributed abundantly to the achievements of the past—is giving its best and utmost to the war job of today. Tomorrow, when peace comes, Imperial Oil service station men will again speed the motorist happily along the highway. Imperial Oil research workers will turn their inventive skill from tasks of war to problems of peacetime progress. The Imperial Oil geologists, engineers and drillers who brought Norman Wells and Turner Valley into being will continue to search for the oil resources necessary to our further progress.

Ellen's Diary

By An Island Farmer's Wife

trying day for our harvesters. The binder still refused to tie every sheaf until after supper the men found the cause of its omission and then their work became less burdensome. James was called to assist a neighbor initiate a young, unwilling horse into the ways of hauling a noisy binder. He was able presently with a little patience, to see the colt cheerfully and calmly pull his share of the machine. James told me it was really only a matter of putting the animal "in his right place." Another instance when practice helped ease a trying situation, practice and understanding. James has put the papers aside to inquire if there "is any of that corned-beef left?" so again the lunch will be substantial. Perhaps

"like an apple will be 'lead' at night.

The sky is lowering tonight and it will be fortunate if rain comes to quench fires and bring moisture to the crops. Sheaves of grain will dry. However James says as he looks out into the darkness: "The wind is mostly west," indicating harvest weather again to-morrow. Until tomorrow — Diary—Good-night.
