

Says Men Want Pals, Not Patients!

SHE was engaged! She was the happiest girl in the world. A round of teas and parties, a whirl of pleasure, and she began to wonder what was the matter. Too tired to go out—and he was as becoming tired of her?

It was at this point that Miss Margaret Belden of Los Angeles woke up to the fact that something had to be done about it. "Men want pals, no patients," she writes. "I went right to my doctor. Do you know what he said? Rest—and Nujol!"

"With a prayer in my heart and Nujol in my medicine cabinet I began to fight back to being the healthy, robust, happy girl I had been before. Two months passed. No more tears—no more worrying, no more bad dreams. Today I beat him on the tennis court, and although he can out-swim me, I make him work doing it. It's good to be happy. It's good to be free, physically, and to be able to share, any time, in sports or dancing or anything else with the one you love!"

Here's another one who has learned that the simplest and surest way to be well and full of good spirits is to clear the bodily poisons out of your system regularly. Not with pow-

THE THIRD WARNING

"I'm hanged if I believe Seymour's going near the hills," I deliberated. "If he knows anything about the case being collared yesterday, and Shaw disappearing last night, then surely he'll be getting busy now himself." I got to my feet full of purpose. "We'll jolly well see where the blighter is going!"

In two steps I was at the door. I called out to Jessie that I had got all I wanted from the books and was going back home, and the next moment I was in the farmyard. I walked sedately past the kitchen window and into the lane, so that Jessie's mind would be at rest concerning my destination, then crossed into the field and doubled back on my tracks. At the corner of the farm buildings I paused and took an observation.

A stony cart track led in a slow gradient to the foot of the steeper hill slopes. There was no sign of Seymour; but then the mist, restricted one's vision to a narrow radius. I listened intently. There was the distant clink of feet upon the stones. On soft grass I skirted the side of the dyke that bordered the cart track, and kept those footsteps within earshot.

Once the mist swept upward in thin whorls, and I dropped behind the dyke like a winged rook, but not before I had seen my man plodding along, pipe in mouth, his sketching-gear slung on his back, as innocent-looking a figure as you could meet on these hillsides. I kept on the north side of the cart track. For I expected any moment to hear or see him clambering over the dyke and doubling back Southward to the main road. But in this anticipation I was wrong. He doggedly held

CANADIAN MADE RUGS PLEASE THE QUEEN

"Oh, I do like the sheen of those Carpets," Her Majesty remarked at the British Industries Fair. When Her Majesty The Queen and Princess Mary were inspecting the exhibits at the British Industries Fair, Her Majesty was much attracted to the display of Baristan Rugs. "Oh, I do like the sheen of those carpets," she exclaimed. Extracts from English papers go on to state that The Queen and Princess Mary were so attracted by the rich appearance and beauty of the rugs that they requested further information for their own private use.

BLACK EDGE HILL

Seymore had turned to the left. Was this a fool's errand, I asked myself—had he really come to paint some mist effect? Or had he some deeper motive in these frequent pilgrimages to the hills? I held doggedly on my way. The road was steeper now and wound hither and thither round hummocks of heather and gorse. Soon I was hoarse and perspiring with exertion. There was also the strain of keeping my man at a safe distance for there was the danger that he might drop at the roadside for a breath and I blunder into him. But he must have been in excellent condition, because he held steadily on without a pause. And then I heard the clang of a gale, and with steaming breath I panted out a hopeless hope that this was the journey's end.

At the gate I drew up to take stock of the position. It was impossible to gauge how high I had come, but this point seemed to be at the top of the rise, for the road swung sharply away to the left dipping downward as sharply. Beyond the gate, a rough cart-track led through the heather, disappearing into a dense belt of fir trees. A couple of Shetland ponies tossed their manes and eyed me inquisitively.

I looked over the gate. To the right the ground rose in a gentle curve and dropped toward the valley where Brackenbridge lay, but to the left I could see nothing but a rickety wire fence and beyond it mist. Seymore had disappeared into the firs ahead, and I clambered over the gate and made for the fence. A few yards beyond the fence the ground dropped sheer away into space. I tossed over a pebble. There was no sound, not the faintest clink came back to me out of that white well of fog. Then with a rush of recollection I knew where I was. For a while, with a trick forefinger on the brown shadings of the map, had described it to me; this was my own property where I stood—Black Edge Hill.

I made across the heather and ran for the shelter of the fir wood. It was with a comfortable feeling of safety that I drew up in the fir-wood. I pushed through and came out on the other side of the belt. The ground rolled forward before me, sloping gently upward to my right, while the edge of rock on my left, and the

MORE MYSTERY

I had kept clear of the road among the firs, in case I should run into some one; and in my next move I gave it a still wider berth. Making up my mind to proceed, I suddenly emerged from cover, sprinted for the clump of trees round the farm building, and dropped in the undergrowth, panting. The whole thing at this point struck me as ludicrous; and I smiled at the notion of my spying like this round my own property—I who, with a word could clear everybody from the place and live there myself if I chose. But it was not the place I had come to see; it was the people. What did Seymore want at this lonely spot? He had come straight here without a pause; he certainly hadn't dropped in impulsively in passing; what then was his errand? Perhaps he was making a friendly call, and I was but making a blunder; but it would do no harm to have a quiet look round. I got to my feet and, crouching, moved forward through the trees toward the farmhouse. A closed gate led into the farmyard. The buildings were bigger than I had imagined; a lofty barn, built of stone, with an earth roof to which weeds and mosses hung filled one side of the grass-grown

Shot from Guns

125 million food cells exploded. That's what makes Puffed Grains crisp... delicious... virtually as nourishing as hot cooked cereals. YOU may have wondered why Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are so light and crunchy... so meltingly good to eat. Here's the secret. They are made by an utterly different process from all other ready-to-eat cereals. Grains of wheat and rice are sealed in bronze guns. The guns are revolved in fiery ovens. In this terrific heat the natural grain moisture in each tiny food cell expands into steam. When the guns are fired, 125 million explosions occur in each grain. Every tiny food cell is completely broken up. (Just as it would be from long hours of cooking.) Hence every particle of food is completely digestible. This is why Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are rated as virtually as nourishing as hot cooked cereals. When these grains come forth in showers from the guns, they've been puffed to 8 times normal size. They're crisp, fragile, crunchy... deliciously good to eat. Their taste like sweet new nutmeats. Like fresh buttered popcorn. You'll say you never before dreamed that wheat and rice could be so meltingly good to eat. Don't neglect to give your family this most delicious... more richly nourishing cereal. Order Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice from your grocer today. 4-23-31.
