As they went down the street, taking little, they met David hesitating at a corner. He had been waiting nervously for their appearance, for he had seen them go into the Grants' house and knew it would be undesirable to make a call while they remained inside. He thought it might be wise, too, to consult them, when they did leave, on the subject of Norah's mood.

"Good evening," David said, "I'm Donald rather dourly. In his heart he blamed the young fisherman for a great many of his troubles. If only he had made it up with Norah instead of bawling and taunting her."

"Good evening," returned David. He cleared his throat. "Could I speak to you for a minute alone, Donald?"

"The other fishermen passed on. 'What's the matter?' asked the old man. 'Is—er—is Miss Grant in an approachable kind of mood? I mean—I want to see her and I don't want to be fighting with her again, and—'

Donald spat, as fishermen do. "I'm no sure what you're driving at, David. But I'll tell you this. He paused, then went on bitterly: 'Miss Grant said, not more than five minutes ago, that all of us—all her fishermen, and you as well—could go to blazes for all she cared.'"

David's face dropped. "She's that did she?" "Ay. Those were her very words. Old Donald spat again and went his way. Over his shoulder he flung a parting comment: 'Ye're a pair of young idiots,' he said."

TRYING TO FOOL HIM?
David scarcely knew he was feeling cold and creep through his veins. So she was trying to fool him again, was she? After appearing so friendly and eager to make amends on the previous night, she was preparing once more to defy him. After he had promised not to tell the police about Menteth, she had, from old Donald's account, no feeling of gratitude towards him.

Don't Suffer PERIODIC PAINS Try This Way For Relief

Dr. Mrs. Ruth Wilson's "Functional Periodic Pains" caused you so much trouble that you need a new kind of relief. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription for a woman, was tested of the pain, and gained strength.

FOR over 70 years, countless thousands of women, who suffered functional monthly pains, have been cured by the use of this medicine. It is the most famous remedy ever discovered. It is a powerful, yet gentle, and safe, and effective, and reliable, and it is the only medicine that has been tested of the pain, and gained strength.

And yet David was more hurt than any. He had been told that there was no point in keeping his appointment with her now. She'd fly at him, probably, and things would only be made a great deal worse than they were already. He'd return home and talk over the affair with his aunt.

He felt inclined to go straight to the police station and charge both Menteth and Norah with the attempt to cause an explosion in the engine of the Silver Spray; but he had been told that if he did the self between Norah and himself would be irreparably widened.

He found Miss Arabella McGreggor donning her black coat. She gave the rather helpless look on his face. "Come with me to the evening service," she asked. He shook his head.

"When will you see to it that the kettle is boiling for I have a number that I picked up for almost nothing on a bargain table?" And so generally is this opinion held that the marriage can't stand the naked truth and has to be dressed up in frills and furbelows, at when we hear a husband and wife uttering their real thoughts to each other and scorning to use any fibbs for their conduct, we know they are headed for Reno.

Certainly all husbands and wives would prefer to be perfectly candid with their mates, for it takes time, trouble, ingenuity and a good memory to concoct even a fairly plausible yarn and lives from such a lie. Every man would like to be able to tell his wife that he met one of his old sweethearts downtown and took her to lunch because he was bored to see if she was as charming as he remembered her.

Every woman would enjoy being able to deal frankly with her husband instead of having to flatter and cajole him and stuff him full of good food before she tells him that Mother is coming for a long long visit, or that she needs a new evening frock.

But they care not do it. There is too much danger of starting something. And so they abandon the straight road for the soft and devious path that steps high, wide and handsome around the truth. Now this fear of the truth that most married couples have is at the bottom of many divorces for it keeps husbands and wives from being honest with each other and thrashing out their grievances in the open and thus give a chance for correct whatever fault was that got on the other's nerves.

Half the men in the world don't know why the gay, sweet girls they married have turned into sour and disgruntled women. And nine-tenths of the deserted wives spend their time bawling on their husbands' long time taste for them.

The man doesn't tell his wife that the reason he lost his affection for her was because she had loved sovenly and dull, and that the reason he no longer kissed her was because he didn't like the taste of cold cream. He just goes out and finds another lady who is easy on the eyes and uses a better brand of cosmetics.

The woman doesn't tell her husband what's so philosophical in her dream for he is the way he eats and that when he gorges his soup she doesn't trust herself to have the carving knife handy. She keeps silent as a clam about what is really breaking her heart and either divorces him, or turns into a domestic martyr.

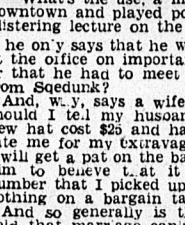

Neither has the slightest idea of what it was that their mates found in them that made them un-

DOROTHY DIX SAYS — TRUTH HAS TO BE HANDLED WITH DISCRETION IN MARRIAGE

Too Much Frankness Often Leads to Trouble, so it is Best to Use Some Diplomacy

It would seem that marriage is the place of all others in the world where truth should do its great and perfect work, and that no other two people should be as honest and candid with each other as husbands and wives. Perhaps this is the dream of every young couple who enter the holy estate and who think how restful and peaceful it is going to be to have some one before whom they will not have to be constantly putting on an act; some one to whom they can speak freely, without subterfuge; some one upon whom they will not have to practice the petty deceptions that make them feel like heels. But, alas, the great majority of the newly-weds soon discover that TRUTH is not one of the household gods. It is TNT that has to be handled with care and discretion and in small quantities, or else it will explode and blow up a marriage to Kingdom Come.

What's the use, a man thinks, in telling his wife that he stayed downtown and played poker with the boys and thus let himself in for a blistering lecture on the sin of gambling, when everything will be ducked if he only says that he was out on business, or that he had to meet a customer from Squeedun?

And, w. y., says a wife to herself, should I tell my husband that my new hat cost $20 and he has to rate me for my extravagance, when I will get a pat on the back if I lead him to believe I got it for a little number that I picked up for almost nothing on a bargain table?

And so generally is this opinion held that the marriage can't stand the naked truth and has to be dressed up in frills and furbelows, at when we hear a husband and wife uttering their real thoughts to each other and scorning to use any fibbs for their conduct, we know they are headed for Reno.

Certainly all husbands and wives would prefer to be perfectly candid with their mates, for it takes time, trouble, ingenuity and a good memory to concoct even a fairly plausible yarn and lives from such a lie. durable, nor what little trait of character irritated the other so that he bottled out all of his or her good qualities. And so, because neither one could take the truth or had the courage to tell it, another marriage was wrecked. The moral of all of which is that when you get to the place where you have to grit your teeth when you hear John sinking in his belt, or when you think what a fool a man is to marry when you find Mary's hair in your brush, summon up your nerve and tell them the truth about how you feel and give them a chance to reform. It is a lot cheaper than divorce and less messy.

Helpful Hints For The Women Folk

TO THE BRAVE
Keep on there'll be a sunrise after rain!
And lovely June still follows cloudy May.
And hearts with strength to bear will surely come
Into the brightness of a better day.

The time may come when you will see 'twas best—
The day that well-loved hope was crushed and died;
When you will pass, unmoved and all serene,
The pile at which your heart was crucified.

Then the unworthy loves shall cease to hurt,
All the unworthy hopes shall be no more;
And you shall walk at last, all unafraid,
In a new country, through an open door.
