

A Fatal Spider-Web.

When a fly accidentally gets caught in a spider's web, the spider goes calmly about the work of securing his prey. He doesn't hurry particularly. He takes his time and binds first the fly's feet and then his wings and his entire body. That is the way with the dread enemy of mankind—consumption. It has a web—the web of trivial disorders neglected. When a man heedlessly stumbles into that web, consumption first attacks his stomach, then his blood, then his lungs, then every organ in his body. Many doctors assert that when a man is once in this deadly web there is no escape. That is a mistake. Thousands have testified to their recovery from this disease by the use of the right remedy. Many of their letters, together with their names, addresses and photographs, appear in Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Advice. The remedy that saved them was Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures 95 per cent of all cases of consumption. It cures the conditions that lead up to it. It is the great blood-maker, flesh-builder and germ-jector. Druggists sell it.

Your Favorite Prescription cured my little girl seven years old of St. Vitus's dance. Mrs. A. E. Loomis, of Walnut Grove, Redwood Co., Minn. "She could not feed herself, nor talk. That was fifteen years ago. I have always had great faith in your medicine. I thought I had a terrible cough, and my friends thought I had consumption. I took the Golden Medical Discovery and it cured my cough, and now I am a housewife. I have always praised your medicine and would like to have your Common Sense Medical Advice."

Hay-Making Notes. No specific rules can be laid down for making hay. There are so many conditions to be considered, such as the weather and the heaviness or lightness of the crop, that no definite plan can be adopted throughout. One of the chief points in which many farmers fail is in not commencing to cut hay soon enough, especially when there is a large area to be covered. If a large crop is to be taken off, cutting should be commenced soon enough to enable the whole lot to be cut before the last field is too ripe. Very often the fall wheat harvest comes on before the hay is all cut, with the result that a field or two have to be left till after the wheat is in the barn. When such is the case, this over-ripened hay is not of much more value than good raw as a food. Clover should be cut as soon after the full bloom as the weather will permit. It is much more difficult to cut clover than timothy hay. Clover should never be cut when wet or when the dew is on, as it will dry off better standing than when cut down. The time required for curing clover will depend largely upon the weather and the condition of the crop. A writer in The Rural New Yorker gives his method of making clover hay as follows:

"Supposing the weather promises fair and all is in readiness, I start the mower after the clover has become dry in the forenoon, if I am likely to be rushed; if not, I do not start till the afternoon, and cut until night. The next day, about 11 o'clock, I start the tedder with the rake, and cock up in not very large cocks; I let these remain the next day, while I repeat the operation of making more. The next day I simply turn over the cocks so that the air may circulate and dry the bottom of the heap, and haul to the barn at once. Just here, many make a mistake. The hay that I have so made does not seem dry, but sticky; but, never fear; haul it in to the mow, tramp solid, and it will come out ideal hay, not being discolored—purple blossoms and green leaves adhering to the stems."

This plan should work well only there seems to be extra labor involved in putting the hay in cocks. It may be wise in the case of clover hay to do so, especially if it is to be stacked, but farmers having hay loaders would not care to take the trouble to put the hay in cocks and then spread them out for loading on the wagon. There are differences of opinion as to the best time to cut timothy. Some authorities claim that it should be cut when in the first bloom and others not till after the second bloom has appeared as then there will be more weight and greater bulk. But bulk or weight is not the main thing. The chief thing in hay making is to get as palatable a food as possible. And this can be better secured where the timothy is cut a little on the early side.—Farming.
