Violent Battles

Red line holding the approaches to Moscow.

Against these wedges of steel, Marshal Simeon Timoshenko hurled waves of Soviet infantry, tanks and bombers in far-spread counter-thrusts which in three sectors alone were reported to have destroyed at least 198 Nazi tanks and 31 German planes.

Calmly agreeing that a grand Nazi offensive now had begun, S. A. Losovsky, remarked ardently: "Probably the Germans have several hundred thousand men they wish to lose. They shall achieve that aim."

"Hitler seeks to achieve a major success before the winter sets in with its biting cold and heavy snows."

"We are mobilizing the entire nation to meet this new assault."

Red Star, the official army organ, said:

"The enemy has gathered all he has got to break through. We must answer by a crushing blow. At any price destroy German tanks, planes, guns, manpower. Our army has accumulated great experience in the course of this war. We must utilize it to the maximum."

The first break in the advanced German positions was made, said military dispatches, by Red rifle-men storming forward in the face of heavy fire and was followed by Russian infantry counter-attacks loosed under cover of artillery and trench mortar fire.

The whole front was transfixed in a storm of ordered violence, the Russian defenders using every weapon from artillery and bombers down to flaming oil cans to break down far-spread German motorized thrusts.

While this great showdown battle gathered ever new violence, the northwestern forces of Marshal Klement Voroshilov claimed the greatest success yet made in their long defence of Leningrad.

Authorities estimated that by midnight tomorrow 130 vessels would be forced either to drop anchor and wait for the wreckage to be cleared away or to remove parts of their cargo.

Ruins of the bridge and of a Daluth, South Shore worked feverishly to get locomotive and tender in which two trainmen plunged to their deaths choked the 260-foot approach to the two principal locks leaving only one auxiliary lock to allow draft vessels open to navigation on the American side of the St. Mary's River rapids, and the smaller canal on the Canadian side.
