TARIFF REFORM IN ENGLAND.

The tariff reform movement in the United Kingdom arose some years ago in a cycle of trade depression. It met with unmistakable defeat during the last election, although it was not the main issue. Since then the trade returns have been making a better and better showing. Still the advocates of tariff reform continued the cry that trade and industry were declining, which provoked the Chancellor of the Exchequer to say, in his budget speech: "If hon. gentlemen will examine the facts, they will find there is no need for their well organized despondency."

"And this is true. The Board of Trade returns for June declare that Britain's imports, chiefly raw materials, have increased by £3,000,000 as compared with last year, while exports, chiefly manufactures, increased by over £5,000,000. Huge contracts have in the meantime been placed with the iron and shipbuilding trades, which not only assure employment for large numbers of skilled workmen, but are also having their effect on British trade generally and are increasing the purchasing capacity of the people."

Evidently the time has not yet come when the British people are prepared to adopt the principle of protection. And if we read aright the signs of the times in the United States and Canada we are forced to believe that protection is fast losing its hold upon the Canadian and American people. Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the Canadian West is meeting with strong representations from the people there calling for a reduction of the tariff. We are glad to note the fact, showing as it does that the Maritime Provinces, whose real interests all lie in the direction of free trade, will shortly have powerful allies in the growing west.

We read of one hundred and twenty-five local organizations in the Northwest, established for the determined purpose of promoting tariff reform downward in Canada. The members of these bodies are greatly in earnest in this matter, yet their interests in tariff reduction can hardly be greater than our own. We hope yet to see an organized movement in this Province and throughout the Maritime Provinces for a lower tariff. Such a movement might find some inspiration in Britain's persistent rejection of protection, and in the growing volume of British commerce which a policy of free trade has developed beyond all precedent in the history of nations.

SWITCH AND CATECHISM.

"The most wicked nation on the face of the earth is the American nation." That was what the Rev. Dr. Boggs expressed in his sermon yesterday morning as his deliberate opinion. There is no doubt about it that wickedness abounds in this land, that there is no corruption in high places, that as many vile things are done nowadays as when the great Apostle wrote his letter to the Romans, that great riches make men forget their religious and political duties, that there is much rottenness among the multi-millionaires; but the preacher made the mistake, as we think, of judging the great American nation by the speckled apples in the barrel.

Rockefeller, the most abused of the over-rich, has certainly not spent any of his money in riotous living. John S. Kennedy disposed of his immense wealth in a way that has met the approval of the best and most pious people everywhere. Mrs. Sage is doing a great deal of good with what she has. Daniel Hand devoted his millions to good works. George Peabody did not travel around the country with a woman who was not his wife, as the multi-millionaire who was seen by the preacher in a hotel at Jacksonville was doing, and there are thousands of rich women in the United States who never went up to the bar in any hotel and "swigged" their liquor just as if they were men. Nine pages of the World Almanac for 1910 contain the names of the Ameri-

STRICKEN CAMPBELLTON.

There have been a great many serious fires in Canada within a few months past, and a number of small towns in the Northwest and British Columbia have suffered severely. But no Canadian community that we know of has met with such sweeping and wholesale disaster as the town of Campbellton, New Brunswick. It was a flourishing town; it is now but an ash-heap. A very few houses only remain. Its residences, the homes of the people, their mills, factories, churches; banks, school houses, stores and offices are all gone.

And with these have gone, for a time, the food supply, the earning power and the employment of the people. They need food, clothing, shelter, and help to rebuild and restore their lost possessions. These things they need now, for the time is short between the summer's heat and the winter's cold, against which they must be housed. For these reasons appeals have been made to the other maritime cities and towns for aid, and we have met with a generous response.

We are glad to note that Mayor Rogers has taken the matter up in order that Charlottetown may share in the movement to give aid to Campbellton. Boston and other American cities have shown a noble generosity in this matter. The appeal to us comes nearer. It is a sister town of Eastern Canada that has been stricken. And what has happened to Campbellton may yet happen much nearer home, for no town or city can be wholly safe against the ravages of a sweeping conflagration.

The very fact that our favored city has for many years escaped any great disaster by fire should stimulate us to help our neighbors in the New Brunswick town. The case is one of very great and very real need and we hope and trust that the response may be prompt and liberal, especially from those who have themselves prospered and have not met with fire losses. There is now, by the commendable action of His Worship the Mayor, a direct and reliable way opened by which contributions to the relief fund can be made with convenience and safety. This was needed, and we believe many will avail themselves of it.

can multi-millionaires. They have far more money than it is safe for any group of men to have; but over against them are something like ninety million other Americans who do not belong to their class. It is hardly fair, we think, to condemn the whole-American people because of the savings and doings of a comparatively small class of people. The danger is not so much in fact that this minority is possessed of so great a share of the wealth of the country, but in the attempt of the poorer class, the men and women of small means, to imitate the vices of the rich. It is the little fellows, after all, who degrade the race by following the occupation of "professional pleasure-seekers."

Dr. Boggs, however, preached a great sermon. It was based on the pitiful and pathetic story of Absalom, and it cut to the quick. It was in fact, a plea for Christian education, in the family, in the institutions of learning, in the Church, a fearless exposition of the sins and faults of these times, of the neglect of religious instructions in the family, of the neglect of the moral training of the children, of the disposition of the women to despise their motherly duties, of the carelessness with which the men absorbed in the affairs of their busy life, let their boys and girls go their own gait.

As one of the aids to the right sort of teaching the switch and the catechism were commended as efficient instruments in the making of better men and women. These were formerly used with good results by old-time Presbyterians, and it would be found that they had not yet lost their efficacy. It has been said that the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world, but this hand should be the mother's hand and not the hand of many of the children of the present day of "cards in the morning, cards at noon, and cards or the theatre in the evening," is intrusted.

All of the congregation of the Second Presbyterian Church, where Dr. Boggs preached, seemed to appreciate and enjoy what he said.—Richmond Times Dispatch.

KILLING A FLY.

A la Wait Mason. A fly came flitting through the air and lit upon my dark brown hair. I said, get off, he did not budge, I hit and missed, and said, O fudge!

And when he calmly landed back, I aimed at him another crack. I missed, of course, and off he flew, and shortly he returned with two;

One lit upon my classic nose and tickled me with wiggly toes; To hit him I could not succeed, I only caused my nose to bleed.

The other perched upon my eye—get off the earth, he heard me cry. I swiped at him an awful bat, but only dented in my hat;

I went away and got an axe and aimed at him tremendous whacks. I broke a table and a chair, and cursed in madness and despair;

I tried to soak him on the pate, I broke a saucer and a plate I heaved a brick and missed the beast, who did not mind it in the least.

He lit upon my fevered brow, a practice I could not allow. And so I went and got a gun. I said I'll settle you, my son.

I fired at him a frightful charge; no use, that fly was still at large. I said, I'll burn the brute to death I fear I did but waste my breath.

I lit a fire and made a smoke. Alas! 'twas I did nearly choke. I got a crowbar and a saw, he lit next time upon my jaw.

A china vase I at him threw, I don't know what my life will do. I said, I'll murder you, you scamp; I aimed at him and broke a lamp.

I shattered next the chandelier; he perched this time upon my ear. I cried avant, have mercy, cease; the neighbors brought in the police.

They hauled me up, before the beak, and when he would not let me speak. I cursed that justice to his face, they put me in a dreadful place;

And in a dungeon dark and lone, I lie upon the cold grey stone. I'm innocent, I sadly cry, I only tried to kill a fly.

TIRED OF THE DIET.

(Life).

Two neighbors kept hens and quarrelled because they scratched up each other's potatoes rows. One sold his hens, unknown to the other, who made a large run and fastened his hens up, saying:

"Now, the first hen I see in my garden I shall shoot."

Next day he saw a hen scratching as usual, so he got the gun and shot her, then threw it over his neighbor's rails, saying, "Take your hen?"

The hen was picked up, taken in, and cooked. The following day the same thing happened. Still the neighbor took them up and said nothing till the seventh came over and hit him on the head. Then he picked it up and threw it back at his neighbor saying:

"Eat your old hens! We are tired of eating them, and prefer a brace of pheasants." I sold my hens over a month ago!"
