

Cute in a Baby— Awful at Three —and it's Dangerous—

by Ruth Brittain

Thumb sucking does look sweet in a baby, but it is disgusting in the three-year-old and sometimes it hangs on until fifteen or sixteen! The habit may cause an ill-formed mouth or induce adenoids; and it always interferes with digestion.

Another bad habit—irregularity in bowel action—is responsible for weak bowels and constipation in babies. Give the tiny bowels an opportunity to act at regular periods each day.

If they don't act at first, a little laxative will soon regulate the bowels. Every mother should keep a bottle of it handy to use in case of colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, loss of sleep, or when baby is cross and feverish.

Its gentle influence over baby's system enables him to get full nourishment from his food, helps him gain, strengthens his bowels.

Castoria is purely vegetable and harmless—the recipe is on the wrapper. Physicians have prescribed it for over 30 years. With each package, you get a valuable book on Motherhood. Look for Charles H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper so you'll get the genuine.

IN MEMORIAM

MISS CHARLOTTE VICKERSON There passed to the eternal rest on Tuesday, June 12th Charlotte Vickerson of Charlottetown, aunt of Mr. John Stewart, of Georgetown, after a short illness. Possessed of a wonderful and sympathetic disposition and of a gracious manner she endeared herself to all with whom she came in contact. In the larger circle of the community she was always willing to do her part and in the building of good citizenship was always willing to lend a helping hand. In the home she was of a delightful and winsome personality and those who shared in the hospitality will not forget her graciousness of manner and charm. Her funeral which was held at the St. Peter's Church, Charlottetown, on Wednesday, June 13th, was one of the largest seen for some time.—A.

MRS. NELLIE R. SIMPSON The funeral of Mrs. Nellie R. Simpson, widow of the late Donald M. Simpson, of Bay View, took place at her old home on June 18th, at 1.30, where a short service was held, followed by a service at the United Church, Cavendish, at 2.30. Rev. Peter Jackson conducting the services. The attendance of friends from far and near, testified to the regard in which Mrs. Simpson was held by all who had known her. Mrs. Simpson was the daughter of the late Malcolm Ramsay and Mary Owen Ramsay. She had reached the age of sixty nine years, and leaves to mourn one daughter, Mrs. J. H. Williams of Charlottetown, and two sons, Earl O. of Bay View and Harold H. of Summerside. Also two sisters, Mrs. J. C. Randall and Mrs. J. R. Reid of Chicago. One sister, Mrs. J. H. Hill of Chicago and one brother, George A. Ramsay, predeceased her. The pall bearers at the funeral were: William Robinson, Cedric Simpson, George Owen, Lee Owen, George Taylor, Elmer Taylor.

Great Help To Young Mothers

Baby's Own Tablets Have Many Uses And Are Absolutely Harmless To have in the house a simple, harmless remedy for the minor ills of babies and little children is a great boon to young mothers, and this is exactly why Baby's Own Tablets have been found in thousands of households. The Tablets regulate the stomach and bowels, break up colds and simple fevers, allay the irritation of cutting teeth, yet they have no drug taste and the children like them. Concerning the Tablets Mrs. Ruthven Crommiller, Ruthven, Ont., writes:—"Kindly send me your little book on the Care of the Baby. I have two children, one four years of age and the other a year and a half. Both are in excellent health and the only medicine they have had is Baby's Own Tablets. I always keep the Tablets in the house and am happy to recommend them to other mothers." Baby's Own Tablets are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"Jealous Hearts" By MILDRED BARBOUR

THE LONG-DESIRED GIFT. Tony stood perfectly motionless, struck speechless, with Elinor clinging to his hands. Her lovely eyes shone; her lips were tremulous, demanding kisses. Her words re-echoed in the silence of the room: "I want to be yours—your wife." Tony had the feeling, despite the sense of stupefaction that held him, that this must be a dream. He would awaken in a moment to reality. But he didn't, and Elinor came closer to him, her expression curiously softened and appealing. He became panic-stricken. What if Millicent or a servant should come in! He released his hands and forced a light laugh. "What is this, Elinor?" he bantered. "Rehearsing a role for an opera?" "Tony!" The reproach in her eyes stabbed him. "I—I'm afraid I'm all up in the air," he said lamely. "What's it all about, anyway?" She shrugged her beautiful shoulders petulantly and trailed her gleaming draperies over to the fire. Her eyes under their white lids, were slightly mocking again. "Have I bowled you over, my poor Tony? I was a bit abrupt, perhaps. I should have prepared you better." "Prepared me for what?" asked Tony, utterly bewildered. "I—I say," he broke in, suddenly seized with a sense of fear, "are you keeping something from me? Millicent—has anything happened to Millicent?" Elinor met his anxious question with a little ironic smile. "Yes. Something has happened—to Millicent." "Where is she?" Tony demanded, starting for the door. "I haven't the least idea in the world," answered Elinor calmly. He halted, as if she had struck him. "What's this you're telling me?" Elinor said impatiently: "I tell you I don't know where she is. What does it matter? She's perfectly able to take care of herself." Tony found himself saying: "You always claimed she couldn't. That's why you wanted her to have the money—" "For Heaven's sake," snapped Elinor, "don't take up ancient history. Millicent isn't the same girl now," she said slowly. "I've noticed it." Then alarm seized him again. "What do you mean by saying you don't know where she is? Did she go away without saying where she was going? Didn't she say whether she'd be home for dinner?" Elinor smiled, as if she was about to tell him something very funny. "Just that. She went out, not saying where she was going, the night she sent you that wire to come home." "What?" The stricken expression on his face angered her. "Tony, forget Millicent! She's all right, of course. We'd have heard soon enough, if she wasn't. We must think of ourselves. Don't you remember what I told you when I first came into this room? It's that I'm sure we can be married, at last, after all these wasted years. Millicent said she would do whatever you wished." He stared at her. "What did you tell Millicent to make her go?" "Tony, for Heaven's sake," she began exasperatedly. Then, suddenly, she came to him, raised her wonderful eyes, her beautiful lips. "What difference does it make? You and I are all that matter." To her astonishment, he moved away from her. She followed him, her golden draperies trailing over the soft rugs. "Don't you see, Tony," she spoke softly, less arrogantly than he ever remembered hearing her speak, "it had to be? You and I were meant for each other. But you knew it more certainly than I, else you wouldn't have loved me all these years. I only just found out in Paris, less than a month ago, that I love you, that I've been blind when I sent you to Millicent, that I need you now to make my life complete." He found himself asking dispassionately: "Do you mind telling me what made you find out that you—er—loved me?" Her brows drew together in a slight frown. She had rather expected an emotional outburst at her confession and surrender. She went back to the fire and seated herself in a low chair. With her slender body silhouetted against the firelight, the flames playing on her hair, she was a lovely sight. Suddenly she began to speak: "The revelation came in a flash, Tony. One minute I was heart-whole and fancy free; the next, I knew that I had always loved you, even as you loved me. I knew that my heart had been yours—always. There has never been any one else, any one who counted. It was as though my love was a seed that had lain in my heart all these years. Suddenly, oh, very, very suddenly, so suddenly that it almost frightened me, it burst into splendid flower." "And what made it burst into splendid flower?" Tony repeated her words unconsciously and, when he had realized it, he made a gesture of apology. "I had been to the Opera for an audition before the world's greatest impresario." She mentioned the name, her gaze on the flames. "He told me that I would never be a prima donna, because I didn't know what human emotion was. He said I had never loved or hated, suffered or sacrificed. When I heard him say that, I felt as though my whole life were a failure. All I'd worked for was slipping away from me. And then something Jim Faraday said about love made me search my heart. And I found you! She turned to him, her eyes glowing in the firelight. "You shall give me, through the strength and sweetness and comfort of your love, a voice that will conquer the world." Tony was staring at her. "You mean I'm to be a sort of vocal stimulant?" He commented dryly. "You will be my husband! Come," she held out her arms to him, "come and tell me how happy I am making you, after all these years, Tony. These empty, wasted years!"
