If Your House Could Speak It Would Shout for Surface Protection

Do you know that the annual loss from fire in Canada is only about one-fourth of the loss from deterioration of property? No matter how substantial a building is, the elements will damage it if given a chance. Unless the surface is protected by a surface coating, wear and the elements will work away at it constantly.

You may have a place on your building where the surface coating is giving way and the danger of damage exists. It is worth looking into. The old saying about an "ounce of prevention" must have been particularly written about paint and varnish, for if prevention pays anywhere it does pay on your buildings.

Whether your property be wood, steel, stucco or concrete, save its surface from the elements. If subject to wear instead of weather (like inside floors, furniture and interior woodwork for example) save the surface from wear. All damage of every kind must start at the surface. Save the Surface and you save all.
