The hard-boiled captain had knocked one of his sailors overboard. "Help! Help!" yelled the seaman, "I can't swim. Drop me a line."

THE NEW PLANETOID STIRS SCIENCE

NEW YORK, JULY 2—The Heidelberg discovery of the new planetoid may become the scientific sensation of 1932. It brings astronomical discovery back close to earth at a time when most of the wonders have been coming from examining the inconceivably distant edges of the visible universe.

Why Should We Consider It Degrading for a Poor Man to Marry a Rich Wife?

We were discussing a wealthy girl who is engaged to marry a poor boy. "Humph," exclaimed one woman, "if they do marry, she will have to support the family. Phil is the nicest chap in the world and with plenty of industry and energy, but he only gets a shoemaking salary."

In speculation the new neighbor become a literal stepping stone into space. If men succeed with moon rockets, they may travel to the new planetoid, shut off the power and get a free round trip close to Venus.

Shall Poor Men Take Rich Wives? Dorothy Dix Sees No Reason Against It

Why Should We Consider It Degrading for a Poor Man to Marry a Rich Wife?

We were discussing a wealthy girl who is engaged to marry a poor boy. "Humph," exclaimed one woman, "if they do marry, she will have to support the family. Phil is the nicest chap in the world and with plenty of industry and energy, but he only gets a shoemaking salary."

"But seriously," I went on, "we are all wet in our ideas about rich women and poor men marrying. We have got it all wrong. Whenever a poor man marries a rich woman he is accused of being a fortune-hunter and this makes self-respecting, thin-skinned men fight as shy of a girl with money as if she had the leprosy instead of a bank account."

"We act as if having money deprived a girl of every social and mental and spiritual charm and as if no man could possibly fall in love with her for herself alone, which is, of course, rank nonsense."

girls I have ever known had not a penny to bless themselves with. Take it from me that if having money can spoil a girl, so can the lack of it.

"So there is no more reason for suspecting a man of having married a rich girl for her money than there is of suspecting a man of having married a poor girl to get a good cook. A girl has to have some outstanding charm that appeals to a man and if it is her pocketbook that attracts him, at any rate she has the comfort of knowing that as long as she holds on to that he will never lose interest in her and that her money is likely to last longer than a peaches-and-cream complexion and willow figure."

"Of course, it is easy to see why a young girl, who wants marriage to come to her wrapped up in all the pink chiffons of romance, should resent a man being influenced in the slightest degree by what she has, but I don't see why a middle-aged woman, who is past the sentimental age herself, shouldn't consider that she was getting her money's worth when she married a poor but agreeable gentleman who frankly couldn't marry at all unless somebody else could pay the butcher and baker and candlestick maker."

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

By Annabelle Worthington

Illustration of a woman in a dress with a patterned skirt and a white top. Text: Seldom is a dress so smart and so slenderizing at the same time. It has a subtle air of youth. It's the fascinating one-sided rever collar that bows at the opposite shoulder that does it.

not, when she has the money? We don't think anything of a woman living on her husband's money, and in these days of feminine equality it just as much up to the wife to support the home as it is to the husband, especially if she has the wherewithal and he hasn't.

The Plains Of Abraham By James Oliver Curwood Illustrations by Irwin Meyers Copyright by Doubleday, DePage and Co., Inc.

(Continued) A cry of triumph came from the bleeding lips of the Frankenstein, who saw victory within his reach, for he now regarded the youth, who was on his feet with a hatchet in his hand, as an insignificant obstacle between himself and the pallid-faced loveliness of the girl whose chance had so fortunately placed in his way. This cry, disguised by guile and habit, betrayed only a trace of the white man. It was a cry of exultation of one lost to all the obligations of blood and race, a cry loosed not so much by heat and passion as by the promise of what he saw as his eyes appraised ToINETTE.

let us throw them off our trail." "We will reach it," breathed ToINETTE. He pointed the way and let her go ahead of him, turning his head every dozen steps to look behind. Along the hardwood knoll where the Lussans had gathered their fuel, ToINETTE sped like a graceful nymph, and her long hair streaming about her in the sun until at times Jeems saw nothing but its beauty; and in the contemplation of its loveliness a shuddering horror ran through him. In the stump field at home Hepsibah had told him how both the English and the French had begun to make use of women's hair and that many a gentleman and courtly dandy wore shining curls taken by the scalping knife in wilderness, orgies of rapine and murder. In the narrowness of ToINETTE's escape the thought oppressed him with sickening force. Soon her lack of endurance compelled them to slacken their pace, and when they reached the rocky ascent which led to the crest of the ridge, ToINETTE's breath was breaking sobbingly from her lips and for a while she could go no farther. She gazed in the direction from which they had come, unterrified, and almost with challenge in her look her breast wildly throbbing, her hand reaching out to Jeems. Each of the few minutes that passed seemed an hour to him. Then they climbed to the crest of the ridge. Here Jeems picked his way, choosing the places where their feet would not touch scattered stone or grass or soil, until half an hour of slow and tedious progress lay between them and the point where they had come from the valley. "If they come this far, they will think we have taken the wider and easier country," he explained. "Can you hold out a little longer?" "It was the running that turned me faint," said ToINETTE. "I am as strong as you are now, Jeems. But may I stop and braid my hair? I wish you would cut it off!" "I would cut off my arm first," declared Jeems. "We will be safe further on, and if you will wait until we have put ourselves beyond that mass of rocks off there..." His words remained unfinished. From behind them came a cry. It was not fierce nor one that seemed to carry menace, and bore with it a strange and almost musical softness. Jeems knew its meaning. The Mohawks were on the ridge. One of them was calling his scattered companions to evidence of their passing which he had discovered.

Would Revive Weaving In Quebec Province MONTREAL, July 2—(By The Canadian Press)—Quebec home-spun was the vogue at a recent informal luncheon given by Victor Dore, chairman of the Catholic School Commission here. The Quebec provincial secretary, Hon. Athanasius David, wore a suit made from "Totofu du pays" which had been presented to him some time ago by a group who are sponsoring a campaign to stimulate renewed interest in the weaving of this material by the natives of the province. Other guests were similarly clad. Mayor Fernand Rivest, one of the number, humorously referred to his companions as "les tough du pays," but it was noted that the suits were decidedly becoming. It was agreed by all present that the object of buying and wearing Quebec cloth was to revive one of the old arts of the province to such a point that the rural family could and would supply all its members with homespun and sell the excess
