DOUGHNUT QUEEN JUST TELLS HOW

PORTLAND, Ore., Nov. 1.—(CP)—"Doughnut Queen" Margaret Sheldon can still turn out the succulent sinkers that made her a darling of the American Expeditionary Force of 1918, but she has no desire to cross the seas and "fish them from the grease" for soldiers again.

In the summer of 1917, Margaret Sheldon, now Mrs. B. R. Stufflebeam of Portland, was a Salvation Army worker at Montigny in the Alsace-Lorraine sector. An injured soldier expressed a craving for a good old sector.

She still makes doughnuts with the same recipe that satisfied the doughboys, 500 at a time, usually now for lodges or ex-service organizations. For 500, take 18 pounds of flour, nine pounds of sugar, three ounces of salt, three ounces of ground mace, six tall cans of milk and six cans of water.

A CASE FOR FIRMNESS

Fernandez was suddenly livid with anger and raised his hands as if he would strike the woman to the ground, but Dollimore grabbed his arm and pushed him to the far side of the room.

"When did she see Mr. Lewin?" Dollimore asked sharply.

"You mean he came here?"

"Yes. It was the day before I was sent for."

"Who sent for you?"

"Sadie—my daughter. Fernandez told her to send for me."

"Go on," Ducros said quietly. "If you tell the truth, even now, you may find that is the best policy. I can see that you played a minor part in the affair compared with Fernandez."

"I want to phone to my lawyer," Fernandez said in a calmer tone.

"If I were to tell you what you want—what you deserve—you'd be surprised," said Ducros. "Take him down to the station in one of the police cars and lock him up. I'll be down later on this evening to have a chat with him."

For a moment, it looked as if Fernandez were going to struggle, but suddenly he altered his mind and turned to the door in silence.

"Now, Mrs. Lawes," Ducros said, evenly.

"That lawyer came down with Mr. Lewin and Miss Stenning saw him. It was when she got back from the inquiry."

"That's all wrong," Sadie Pachmann interrupted angrily. "I've told you it was wrong. It wasn't Mr. Lewin."

"She told me that the lawyer said it was but that she knew it wasn't. It's no use, Sadie. I'm going to tell the truth—it's our only chance."

Ducros remained silent, and the woman continued.

"He would have put her away."

"You mean murdered her?" Ducros said sharply.

"Yes. Only she knew where the will was and he wanted it, and if he murdered her somebody else might get it. He tried to force her to tell him."

Dollimore was listening intently; the big saw ruzzle was fitting in as he saw puzzles go when one approaches the end.

"How did he try to force her?" Ducros asked.

"He threatened to murder her."

"You were her warder?"

See Possible Premature Story By Nazi Agency

(By Louis F. Lochner) (Associated Press Staff Writer) BERLIN, Oct. 31.—(AP)—D.N.B., the German news Agency, late today published a report describing how German scouting troops invaded two hastily-evacuated French villages lying before the Maginot line and returned with war booty.

Military experts authorized to give information said the report did not come from the high command.

The experts would not even admit that the report was the first evidence of Germans crossing into French territory, saying that at the French-German frontier it often was difficult to know exactly where the boundary line runs, with the result that inquisitive scouting units may get on the other fellow's ground.

(A French high command communiqué on Oct. 16 said German troops had penetrated momentarily to the French frontier post of Apach.)

Soon after inquiries by correspondents began to pour in, the news agency advised that the report concerned an event which occurred some time ago at the western front.

However, a report of the same occurrence, dated Oct. 31, was front-paged by early editions of tomorrow's Volkischer Beobachter, central organ of the Nazi party.

The story, contradicting the agency's assertion that the event was several days ago, bore the three-column headline "with the reconnoitering unit in the forefield of the Maginot line."

Foreign observers noted that the word "offensive" is in increasing use among many Germans, and wondered whether the news agency had not revealed prematurely the sort of reconnoitering activity which precedes major military activity.

D.N.B. said scouts penetrated into French territory where they soon discovered an unfinished trench almost a mile farther on than the first of two villages.

The military experts also soft-pedaled D.N.B.'s report that army equipment, such as munitions, helmets, and remnants of crashed aircraft, were alleged to have been found.

When the French decided to retreat behind their line at these points, these experts said, points probably were away some equipment that either was stop-work or defective, knowing they would get replacements in their next encampment.

Canadian Unity Strongly Stressed

Carrying On—Some months ago, the Automotive Industry of Canada undertook an educational campaign dealing with the subject of Canadian Unity. In spite of the war, or some might say, because of the war, the industry has decided to continue this patriotic and timely effort.

Since the campaign began, the subject has assumed great significance in the minds of our countrymen. From all over the Dominion have come assurance of close cooperation with the national government from the premiers of provinces. New Brunswick's Mr. Dyrast, has told something in the present announcement of the Automotive Industry of the part his province is prepared to play in this great struggle. We heartily commend a close reading of this story of New Brunswick.
