WEDDING BELLS.—A wedding of much interest in friends in the Maritimes was solemnized at Kingston, Ont., June 16th, when Katherine Margaret, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Bagnall, Charlottetown, was united in marriage to Lieut. William Arnold, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Johnson, Charlottetown, by the Rev. Dr. Brown Chalmers, United Church, officiating. The bride is a graduate of Acadia University in H. B. and is now a dietitian in the Kingston General Hospital. The groom was formerly of the Canadian Bank of Commerce here but is now serving a basket lunch on the corvette Charlottetown. The Guardian joins in happiest congratulations.

SUPREME COURT.—The final case on the docket of the June term of the Supreme Court was disposed of yesterday morning and the Court adjourned sine die by Mr. Justice A. E. Arsenault, who presided. The case, Lou's Monaghan, plaintiff vs. E. Reynolds, defendant, action for damages to plaintiff's motor car at a level crossing, was the only Civil Jury case on the docket. However, an agreement had been reached since it was docketed and the Petit Jury was not necessary. Mr. J. J. Johnston, K.C., represented the plaintiff and Mr. G. J. Tweedy, K.C., the defendant. The two cases on the docket were disposed of last week.

FUNERAL SERVICES.—The funeral of Mrs. Ewen H. Anderson was held yesterday afternoon from her late residence 28 Victoria Avenue where service was conducted by Rev. Hugh Miller. Mr. T. W. Editors Get Information On War Effort

Some 500 members of the National Editorial Association, on their way to Quebec where they will meet in annual convention this week, got some first-hand information on French Canada's war effort Saturday when they visited war plants in this industrial town on the St. Lawrence River, 50 miles east of Montreal.

The newsmen heard from War Services Minister Thorson, Hon. F. J. A. Gardin, former transport minister and Liberal member of parliament for Richelieu-Verchères and were read a message of welcome from Prime Minister King.

A section of the group, which arrived from Montreal by boat, toured the humming shipyards of Marine Industries Limited where they saw corvettes, mine sweepers, base supply ships and 10,000-ton freighters for Canada's merchant marine in various stages of completion.

The remainder visited the gun-producing plant of Sorel Industries Limited which covers more than 18 acres of ground along the river bank and which is equipped to produce naval guns as well as the 26-pound field guns which it has been turning out since July 1, 1941.

Mr. Thorson said that Canada now was doing all in their power to help the Allied nations to victory. We understand you, citizens of the United States, and I hope that you understand us.

Upon the death of his only daughter, Louise M. MacLeod, four years ago, and the founding shortly afterwards of the Louise M. MacLeod Mission in Boston in her memory, he became identified with Christian Mission work in that city. He gave freely of his services in prison work, fire and rescue, rescue missions, and Bible classes. He lived a dedicated life, and through his faithful example and testimony, led many to a closer walk with God, and helped many over the hard places of life by his wise counsel and his prayers.

Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon, at the United Presbyterian Church, Quinby, with Rev. William Nicholl officiating. The church auditorium and adjoining rooms were filled to capacity to pay tribute to the deceased.

Assisting Rev. Nicholl were the following pastors and Christian workers: Rev. Clayton Gray, pastor of Park Avenue Baptist church, Binghamton, N. Y.; Rev. W. A. Haggard, Holbrook; Rev. Charles Faran, Christian and Missionary Alliance pastor, Quinby Point; Ralph Hayes, superintendent of the Louise MacLeod Mission, Boston; Robert Murray, prison evangelist; John Robinson, superintendent of Sunnyside Mission, Boston; Herbert Coulmore, pastor's assistant; and Angus MacLeod, elder and Sunday School superintendent of the United Presbyterian Church.

The service was conducted as follows: Organ prelude, Miss Anne Jussé; "What A Friend We Have in Jesus"; "The City Four-square"; choir selection, "I'm A Pilgrim" and one on the docket. However, an agreement had been reached since it was docketed and the Petit Jury was not necessary. Mr. J. J. Johnston, K.C., represented the plaintiff and Mr. G. J. Tweedy, K.C., the defendant. The two cases on the docket were disposed of last week.

The active bearers were former members of Mr. MacLeod's Sunday School class, Munroe MacLean, Lester Ross, David Inman, Murdoch MacLennan, John Campbell and Morton MacLeod.

Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery where he was laid to rest beside his daughter Louise, who died four years ago, and his infant son, Daniel Roy. A short committal service was conducted by Rev. Nicholl.

"Rock of Ages" was played at the grave by the following members of the Jericho trumpeters, Eleanor Hayes, Ann Smith, Wesley Hayes and Ralph Hayes.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Stewart MacLeod, two daughters, Mrs. Mary MacDonald, of Quinby and Mrs. Peter MacLeod of Bradabane, P. E. I.; two brothers, Guy of Atlantic, and Ernest of Vernon River, P. E. I.; also by devoted nephews and nieces, Charles Donald and Ethel MacDonald of Quinby, and Ker, Robert, and Doris MacLeod of Bradabane, P. E. I.

God took him from our fond embrace. When we would bid him stay, To meet the loved ones gone before, Will join them there some day.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD MAKE THEM "DIFFERENT"

Shots such as this—with an individual, "different" touch—lend life to your album. Try some, as a change from ordinary, routine poses.

EVERYBODY has his preferences—in pictures, in reading matter, in victuals, and other things. Abraham Lincoln summed it up neatly when he said, "You will like this story, if this is the kind of story you like." However, despite differences of taste, most people agree on one point. They feel that something individual—something a little bit out of the ordinary—is better. It is the "different" treatment—the "individual touch"—that counts. That's especially true in snapshots. A clever idea—a different pose—a little individuality in the lighting or arrangement—these give you pictures that make people sit up and take notice, and they're more interesting to you, too—they give you more satisfaction. Consider one concrete case—snapshots of children. You know that most of them are "too much alike." As a rule, they tell no story

House of Hate

By ISABEL GARLAND

He reached into his pocket, pulled out the bit of cloth with the button on it, and flung it onto a table.

"Well," exclaimed his aunt. "That is certainly fortunate! Where did you find the button, dear?"

"In Manders' hand," said Chad tersely, when I found him dead at the foot of the cliff."

"There was a minute of stunned silence. Then, Sheriff Stephens picked up the button. 'Maybe you better tell me what this is all about.' Chad quickly related the story of his discovery.

"It looked darn queer to me," he ended, "because I myself didn't wear my coat yesterday afternoon. I knew at once that some one else must have worn it."

"So you say," Estelle commented. "I know that Chad didn't go out wearing his coat," said Serena, "because I saw him when he went. 'Just a minute,' said Sheriff Stephens. 'Now, as I understand it, you ladies stayed in the house during the afternoon, but the three gentlemen—Mr. Leighton, Mr. Paul Comstock and Mr. Chadwick Comstock—all went out at one time or another.'"

"I was out for a little while, too," said Miss Peasley. "That was when I went out to talk to Manders about the horse. And Miss Leighton has just said she took a little walk."

came into the room. "Well, Bill," said the doctor, sinking into a chair, "Coroner Dean agrees with me as to the cause of death. Mateel Comstock was strangled while under the influence of dope."

Bill Stephens nodded, then rose. "Guess I'll go up to her room and have a look around."

"Oh, Doctor," Heien said anxiously, "you do believe that it was already torn when I wore it, don't you?"

"Certainly I do. What reason would you have for throwing Manders over a cliff? On the other hand, what reason would any one have, I might still consider the accident theory but this button business gets me. That seems to indicate there was a struggle."

"I can assure you that this button business, as you call it, doesn't make me feel exactly comfortable," said Chad. "After all, I can say I wasn't wearing my coat, but how can I make myself believed? Frankly, I think some one was trying to frame me."

"Well, let's forget about the button and Manders for the time being," said Dr. Harry. He turned to Miss Peasley. "Leona, there's something I want to ask you."

"When you were telling us about going into Mateel's room on the night of her death and hiding in her closet, you said you were in the closet for quite a spell and when you came out, the door to the hall was locked. That right?"

"Yes, Alec."

and closed the door." Miss Peasley put both hands over her mouth. Above them her round blue eyes were saucer-like with apprehension.

"I found out something during that minute I spent in that closet," Leona said. Dr. Harry went on. "Want me to tell you—and every one—what it was?"

"She made no answer, only continued to stare at him as if she were hypnotized. 'All right, then, I'll tell them. People, I found out there's quite a big crack in the panel of the door and through it you can see into the bedroom!'"

Paul jumped up. "Do you mean Miss Peasley's hands dropped to her lap, revealing her frightened face?"

"Aunt Leona, why have you been holding out on us?" Chad demanded harshly. "Come on—speak up! What did you see?"

Miss Peasley shook her head dumbly. Serena, swept by pity, put an arm reassuringly around her. "There, dear, it's all right. I'm sure you turned to the others. 'Just because she could see something doesn't mean she did. Perhaps she never even knew the crack in the door was there.'"

"I'm sorry, Serena, but she couldn't have avoided knowing it," said the doctor. "The crack lets a streak of light into the closet."

"Perhaps there was no light on in the room." "Mother always slept with that little brass lamp on her desk burning," Chad said. "Aunt Leona—pull yourself together and spit it out. You saw something. What was it?"

"Oh, no, no!" "You're not—shielding anyone, are you? Do you swear that you did not see who it was who came into Mateel's bedroom and murdered her?"

"I saw no one." Dr. Harry threw up his hands. "Well, when I discovered that crack in the panel of the door and the murderer had accomplished his purpose before Leona came into the room. By the way, Leona, that desk drawer was kept locked, wasn't it? How did you get into it?"

"I had stolen the key one day when Mateel was away, and I had another key made." "What did you want the money for?"

Miss Peasley's wistful glance sought Serena. "I wanted to—go away. Mateel didn't need that money. She had so much. I wanted to go—South."

"Aunt Leona," Chad said grimly, "what's there to prove that it wasn't you who strangled Mother before you looked in her desk for the money?"

She looked at him with a curious remoteness. "Nothing, I suppose, except that I am not large—and not very strong—and your mother was both."

"She was doped and could put up no fight." "I know—but I didn't murder her." (To Be Continued)
