JAMES P. HUBBARD

RUM TRAFFIC SURE TO GO.

Not long ago one of my friends, about to start on a fishing trip into the mountains of North Carolina, offered to bring some photographs of the illicit stills with which the region is supposed to abound, and which he had often seen on other trips a few years before, writes Dr. H. S. Williams in the Century Magazine. When he returned, however, he not only failed to bring the promised photographs, but he had an astonishing report to make on the seeming change in public sentiment that had taken place during the last half decade. Formerly there had been no difficulty in discovering the illicit stills, provided their owners were sure that one was in no wise connected with the government revenue service. Now no stills were to be found. Doubtless they yet exist, but seemingly in no such numbers as of old. But more notable than the mere paucity of distilleries seemed the sentiment of the people on the subject tacit, rather than expressed. For generations this had been their most intimate point of contact with the outer world. In years gone by it was nothing at all unusual, on noting the absence of a citizen of recognized standing in the community to be told that he had 'gone away for a while,' which meant that he was 'serving time' for illicit distilling. Otherwise law abiding, honest, self-respecting people, they emphatically did not regard this as anything of which to be ashamed. They could not see why they had not quit-much right to ferment grain and distill alcohol from it as to raise the grain itself. But now, while little was said, it seemed obvious that the sentiment was changing. The leading citizens were not 'away,' and there seemed a growing recognition that the question of distilling liquors had aspects not formerly admitted. This individual observation tallies with the well-known fact of the official spread, so to say, of the temperance movement throughout the South, as is shown by the passage within the last three years of prohibitory laws forbidding the sale of liquor in Georgia, Alabama, North Carolina, Mississippi and Tennessee. When we consider, moreover, that State-wide prohibition is now the law of the nine states (Maine, Kansas, North Dakota and Oklahoma, in addition to those just named), having an aggregate population of over twelve millions; that local option, applied to communities in other states brings the total number of people living in 'theoretically dry' territories to about forty millions, it must be admitted that the growth of the temperance sentiment in recent years has been phenomenal. Particularly noteworthy is the fact that this growth is not merely sectional in scope but is general, from Maine to Oklahoma, from Alabama to North Dakota.

BEAUTIFUL CHRISTMAS SOUVENIR.

The latest from Montreal confirms the opinion that the Christmas Number of the Montreal Standard will be a great triumph in the way of artistic productions. The illustrations are superb, while the colored supplements are far away ahead of any of the British or French souvenir numbers. The pictures of Canadian scenery will be a revelation to people in all lands. The Christmas number of The Standard will find its way to all corners of the earth. Dealers are clamoring for supplies, and it is abundantly evident that the publishers will be utterly unable to supply all comers, although they have thirty presses at work upon it. The Christmas Standard is only 50c. It has five beautiful supplements.
