UNCLE RAY'S CORNER

STUDY OF THE SKY
TELESCOPES SMALL AND LARGE

Three hundred years ago, a man named Galileo began to study the sky with a strange instrument. It was known as a spy-glass, because you could "spy" things with it.

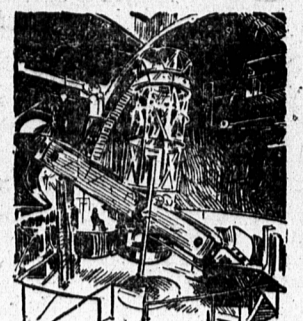

The purpose of the spy-glass was to make distant things seem closer. People could see ships 30 miles away by using this invention.

Galileo's first spy-glass was a metal barrel, shaped like a section of the pipe nowadays for plumbing. It was about two feet long and the hole was less than an inch wide.

At each end of the barrel was a lens, a piece of glass curved on both sides. By looking through his spy-glass, Galileo found that the moon looked about 20 times larger than before.

Since the time of Galileo, many others have studied the sky with spy-glasses or "telescopes." These have been made larger and larger, and by their use we have learned wonderful things about the stars.

The largest telescope used today is in California, at Mt. Wilson. The Mt. Wilson telescope has a tube or barrel 40 feet long. There are no lenses in the tube. The great thing about this telescope is the giant mirror at the base, which is eight feet and five inches wide. There are other mirrors in the tube which help to collect the light of the stars and throw it on the giant mirror.

This telescope weighs more than 100 tons. It is kept slowly moving so that the motion of the earth is offset. The moving is done with the help of wheels on the order of clockwork, and there is a powerful driving clock. A much larger telescope of the same type is being made for use in California. It will have a mirror more than 16 feet wide!

A Morning Smile

A boy twelve years old was the important witness in a lawsuit. One of the lawyers, after cross-questioning him severely, said: "Your father has been telling you how to testify, hasn't he?" "Yes," said the boy. "Now," said the lawyer, "just tell us how your father told you to testify." "Well," said the boy modestly, "father told me the lawyers would try to tangle me in my testimony; but if I would just be careful and tell the truth, I could tell the same thing every time."

A Fashion Hint

THE IMPORTANT ENSEMBLE The ensemble undoubtedly leads the mode in chic this season, and is equally smart whether made of silk crepe or sheer woolen.

You simply must include at least one ensemble in your Spring wardrobe. Style No. 411 is sketched in slate blue woolen, one of the most flattering and smartest ideas for all around wear. In silk crepe, navy blue is an excellent choice with the blouse made of printed silk crepe in beige, blue and orange. Still another idea that you'll like immensely, are the companion prints in silk crepe and georgette which are a little more formal. Make the coat in the longer length seen in small black view of the silk crepe, and the two-piece dress of the georgette crepe that matches perfectly as to pattern and coloring, and you'll have an outfit of French inspiration, whose cost will be a mere trifle. Pattern is designed in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20 years, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust. Price 15c in stamps or coin (coin is preferred.) We suggest that when you send for this pattern you enclose 10 cents additional for a copy of our Spring Fashion Magazine. It's just filled with delightful styles, including smart ensembles, and cute designs for the kiddies.

Are Second Marriages Happier Than First Ones—A Girl Who Looks Before She Leaps. Dangers of Making a Loving Husband Jealous.

Dear Dorothy Dix—I married in my early teens. Thought I was really in love, but found out that I was mistaken. My husband and I stuck together for eight years, then we parted. Now I have met a man I really love and admire and trust. But do you think a second marriage will bring me more happiness and content than the first one did? Do people go into these second marriages with a better understanding of one another? I can see many faults I had and many mistakes that I made in my first marriage. Will this help me to make a success of my next venture? INTERESTED READER.

Answer: A poet has said that we climb to higher things on the stepping stones of our dead selves, and it seems to me that this is more true in marriage than it is in anything else.

When a marriage is a failure, the average husband and wife each almost invariably lay the whole blame for it on the other. The neglected wife whose husband spends his time at the club or playing pool calls upon us to weep with her in her loneliness. She never admits that the reason her husband never stayed at home was because the house was untidy and the food badly cooked, and there wasn't a clean or a comfortable place in it which he could sit down and read his paper in peace.

The woman whose husband is a philanderer bemoans the injustice of her fate. She never admits that she has left herself so slovenly and fat and unattractive that it gave her husband a pain in the eyes to look at her.

The woman whose husband grows tired of her, and who at middle age falls in love with some other woman, feels that she is a martyr to the perfidy of man. She refuses to face the fact that she has done nothing to improve her mind or keep in step with her husband; that she never reads a book or a paper or a magazine, or has a thought beyond her housekeeping and the beauty parlor and the shops, and that she has grown so dull and boring that she has driven him to a more intelligent and interesting woman for companionship.

Nor does the man whose wife is peevish and fretful and complaining ever feel that he is to blame for her state of mind because he has never tried to develop any sense of humor or philosophy in her, and he never cheers her up by taking her to any place of amusement or doing any active thing to make her happy and contented.

So I think that when a man and woman are big enough and broad enough to face the fact that if their first marriages were unhappy it was largely their own fault that they stand a splendid chance of making a second marriage a success. Certainly every one can look back and remember where she made mountains out of molehills, where a little tact and diplomacy would have saved a row, where silence would have been golden, and where she might have recognized that she should have met a situation with patience and forbearance instead of, with temper and irritability.

Most second marriages are happier than first marriages, and this is not only because people who marry the second time are older and more sure of themselves and of what they want and need in a mate, but because most widows and widowers know the bitter and unavailing regret with which they looked down upon a confined form and remembered sharp words said in anger, little kindnesses, little tenderesses that would have brought joy to the one who was past their reach, and that they had neglected to show.

The same thing holds true of divorce. Very few men and women go through that fiery furnace without having some of their selfishness and egotism burned away, and without determining to try to do more to make their second marriage more of a success than their first one was.

DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Dorothy Dix—Is marriage all it is cracked up to be? Is it right to marry a man when one likes him lots, but doesn't know whether it is love? Is it love when you can't get the person off of your mind? Do you really love a person when little things they do annoy you, and will these seem larger in the years to come? Does everybody hesitate just before the knot is tied, afraid to risk it? If a man is slow in proposing and you know he loves you, what is the matter? Does it hurt when you realize that husband would rather read the paper than talk to you? Is a husband worth giving up a good education and a good job for, even if we have to live on bread and water for a while? Has a man of 26 got as far as he will ever be if he has had practically the same job for seven years? LOIS.

Answer: What a questionnaire! You run the whole gamut of the risks of matrimony. But to answer a few of your queries.

Marriage is not all it is cracked up to be, nor is it all it is knocked for. It is like every other venture in life, full of potentialities for success and failure, for happiness and misery. It is up to you to make of it what you will.

The main thing for a girl to consider in marriage is whether she is in love or not, and as long as she is uncertain as to the state of her affections she is wise if she gives herself the benefit of the doubt, and decides that she is not.

For love is like the flu; you may mistake half a dozen bad colds for it, but when you get the real article you know you've got it. You will ache in every bone and have a high temperature, and you won't need any love doctor to diagnose your symptoms for you. You will recognize them yourself.

Not being able to get a person off of your mind is no sign of love. A lot of people we actually hate preoccupy our thoughts. On the contrary, it is no indication that you don't love the young man because his faults annoy you. All of us have little ways that get on the nerves of others, but the happiness of marriage depends largely on our being able to put up with these personal peculiarities of our life partners.

Marrying on bread and water is romantic but hazardous. You will find after you are married that you get hungry and want beef steaks and good clothes and amusements just as much as you did before marriage, and you will be very wise to wait until you can properly finance a home before you get married. Love is mighty apt to sneak out of the window when the bill collector hammers on the door.

There are many reasons why a man who is in love with you may be slow in proposing. In your particular case it is doubtless because he is not making enough money to marry on, and he wants to wait until he is in a better position before he takes a wife. At 26 a young man is just beginning to get on his feet in business and it is to his credit that he has held the same position for seven years. It shows that he has patience and persistence, and that he gives satisfaction to his employer.

Of course, every sane human being hesitates on the brink of matrimony. No one can take a leap in the dark without some misgivings as to where he will land. My advice to you is to keep on hesitating until you are more sure

TYPES OF COLORING

A request has come from one of my readers for an article of different types of coloring. She wants to know whether it is the color of the hair or the skin tints that class a person as a blonde or brunette?

There are many degrees of blonde-ness and brunette-ness, but for convenience they may be divided into the following groups:

Blondes, with golden hair, pink white skin and blue, gray or brown eyes.

Second. Pale blondes, with golden hair, pale white ivory skins and blue, gray eyes. The difference between this and the first type is in the complexion.

Third. The titian blonde, with red dish-gold hair, white or ivory skin and eyes of blue, gray or brown.

Fourth. The medium blonde, with light or medium brown hair, medium complexion and eyes of blue, gray or brown. This is the commonest type of blonde, often called ashern or drab blonde.

Fifth. The olive blonde, with fair, medium or light brown hair, dark skin inclined to sallowness and blue, gray or brown eyes. There is sometimes a reddish or sandy tinge in the hair.

Brunettes First. Fair-skinned type, with dark or medium brown hair and dark blue, gray or brown eyes.

Second. Medium-skinned type, with dark, medium brown or black hair and eyes of dark blue, brown or gray.

Third. Florid brunette, with fair skin and very rosy cheeks, medium brown or black hair and blue, brown or gray eyes.

Fourth—Auburn brunette, with chestnut or auburn hair, medium or ivory skin and eyes of brown, blue or gray.

Fifth. Olive brunette, with dark brown or black hair, brown or black eyes and olive skin some color.

Sixth. Black-haired type, with clear olive skin, good color, black hair and dark eyes.

Of course, there are many fine degrees of coloring between these types. I have not mentioned green or hazel eyes, but consider them as included between the brown and the gray. It is not always easy to classify some types. For example, an individual with medium skin, medium brown hair and blue eyes might be placed in the second group of brunettes or in the fourth group of blondes, according to the classification just given. Perhaps it would be more accurate to have three groups instead of just the two, the third being intermediate and including all types with a combination of medium or dark skin with light brown or medium brown hair.

Tomorrow—Beauty Questions Answered

Dear Miss Dix—Is it a good plan for a woman occasionally to make her husband jealous? I have a friend who is very much in love with her husband and she keeps him in doubt as to what she does when he is away from home. It is a new plan she is trying and it seems to work, as he used to take her for granted, but now he is acquiring a jealous disposition. A GIRL FRIEND.

Answer: The first thing your friend knows she will find herself involved in an ugly scandal, and she will end up in the divorce court. The tactics that apply before marriage are ruinous afterward. It may pique a boy's interest in a girl to think she is interested in other boys and has dates with him, but a husband wants to feel secure in his wife's heart and to know that he is the only man.

Anyway it seems to me that there are difficulties and dangers and troubles enough in married life without a woman going out and deliberately to rouse the green monster in her husband's breast and make him suspicious of her. DOROTHY DIX.

HOW TO BANISH CATARRH

Mrs. H. Cameron, a well-known resident of White's Cove, N. B., has discovered a simple, yet efficient, manner of stopping colds and nasal catarrh. "For some years," she writes, "I have had catarrhal trouble in my nose and throat, and have been subject to very frequent colds. Nothing gave me the immediate relief I secured from Catarrhose. If the nostrils are plugged, and there is a dropping of mucus from the throat, a few drops of Catarrhose clears up the trouble at once. If sufferers will use Catarrhose, I am sure they will keep free from colds, bronchitis, sneezing and catarrh. Two months' treatment, including hard rubber inhaler. Price $1.00 small size 50c. Catarrhose is guaranteed.
