THE GUARDIAN SHORT STORY

He stood looking down at her for a moment in silence, and then he said abruptly, "Do you like me?"

Something in his tone sent the quick blushes to her cheek.

"Of course," she said hurriedly and turned from him and began to straighten the favors on the table.

"The children will be here in a minute," she remarked, and then she stopped and stared, for at her own place was a favor different from the rest—a shamrock in green enamel, and on one leaf glittered a diamond dewdrop.

"Oh," she said and flashed a glance at him—"oh, did you put it there?"

"Yes," he came and stood beside her. "I put it there, Millicent."

She shook her head.

"I mustn't take it, please," she said. "It is too valuable for me to accept."

"It has no value except the sentiment. Do you know what the shamrock means?"

"No."

"One leaf means truth and one valor, and the other one is love, and all that I have of truth I give to you, and all that I have of valor, and above everything else, I give you love."

"She was very white as she said, 'You must not.'"

"Why?"

"I am dedicated to my work here. I shall never marry."

He squared his shoulders.

"That is nonsense. I'll dedicate myself to it, too, and we will work together."

"Oh, no, no!" she cried. "I must not listen. If I married you I should care so much that I should forget all this, and I should live for you in a way that I have of truth I give to you, and all that I have of valor, and above everything else, I give you love."
