

WONDERFUL JUNIPER BERRIES

And Their Action On The Kidneys

For many years, it has been known that Gin is excellent for the Kidneys. Remedies, containing the medicinal principle of Juniper, were regularly prescribed by physicians. Yet Gin alone will not cure serious Kidney Trouble as it has other injurious effects. Now, GIN PILLS contain the soothing, healing properties of Gin (whence the name GIN PILLS). But GIN PILLS also contain other curative agents. It is the combination of these several valuable ingredients that gives GIN PILLS the wonderful power to cure all forms of Kidney and Bladder Trouble.

GIN PILLS ease the pain and soothe the Irritated Bladder. GIN PILLS cure suppression and incontinence of the Urine. GIN PILLS relieve Pain in The Back. GIN PILLS reduce swollen hands and feet. GIN PILLS give strength to weak Kidneys. GIN PILLS cure Rheumatism. Juniper combined with the Diuretics in GIN PILLS worked wonders for Mr. Herbert.

PLESSVILLE, ONT.
"I suffered with Kidney Trouble for several years, and tried numerous remedies and doctors' prescriptions without permanent relief, my case being chronic. After seeing about GIN PILLS and as it is a known fact that Juniper without alcohol is excellent for the kidneys, I decided to try GIN PILLS. One single pill gave me great relief. I have now taken almost four boxes of GIN PILLS and find myself completely cured. No more bad humor—no increase in weight—clear eyes—fresh color—more strength and vigor. This is what GIN PILLS have done for me."

H. POWIS HERBERT.

GIN PILLS are sold by all dealers at 50c a box, 6 for $2.50 and are guaranteed to give relief or money refunded. Try them on this positive "money-back" guarantee. Sent on receipt of price if you prefer. Dealer does not handle them. Sample box free if you write us mentioning this paper.

AN UNCUT DIAMOND.

Life for the old surgeon and his wife had lost little or none of its zest. They still trotted the globe as industriously and enthusiastically as in the days of their early youth, when wars and rumors of wars called to them, physician and nurse. Perhaps it was then that the habit for taste for travelling was formed, but certain it is that no country to them was now entirely new. Whatever was novel or strange had drawn and continued to draw, like a magnet, that is why five little mounds rose in as many different countries instead of in Alsace-Lorraine, where both were born and where their children should have slept their last sleep. The doctor was slender and dark and all French, though the world called him "citizen." His wife was of the ampler proportions of her German mother, with hair like sunshine and eyes of the purple of pannies. Utterly dissimilar as they were identical, the suggestions of one apparently the intuitive wish of the other. So when the doctor proposed a second trip to the states his wife hailed it as her chief desire, and with the my nursing and Max in the cab, will be—just nothing. It's getting the lot that bothers."

She sighed and then laughed merrily. "Oh, my friends!" she cried, "it's a good fairy I'm prayin' will pass my way. That's as Nora Mahaffey, my good neighbor, puts it, and Nora knows that nothing short of a fairy could bring me such luck. Don't say there are no fairies! I insist that there are or ought to be." She laughed again, roguishly, then a silence fell, and for a time the splashing of falling water was the only sound. Gretchen absently twisted a little gold wire on the third finger of her left hand with the thumb and with her softly drawn cheeks tried to intercept the doctor's gaze, which may have been on the future of this small romance, or travelling backward to another one in which he himself figured. At any rate, it was far away. When it finally came she smiled and nodded, and he rose alertly and left the room.

When he returned he carried a small leather purse, and going over to her he poured the contents into her palm. After a moment she held up a small object and when he had smiled and when he had smiled and when she had smiled and when she had smiled, she looked at her hand and put in the pink-stained finger tips a rough little stone, dark and discolored, but with flecks of green and yellow and crimson.

"A nest egg, my dear," she said, "and may luck go with it. That's good fairy passed down to me after I'd been far-off Africa," the doctor added, "and for our Gretchen's sake."

"In memory of our Gretchen," the old wife corrected, and Gretchen laughed like a child, and pressed it to her lips.

"Oh, I'll treasure it," she cried, "the dear, shiny thing, just as I'll treasure the memory of you, my good fairies and friends."

That evening there was a sudden change of the invalid's plans, and in the early morning she and Gretchen were on the way to another health resort. But for years letters followed wherever the doctor and his wife went, all telling in Gretchen's own laughing way of the good fortune that kept them company. The home had taken form, there was a united family, and then—a wee Gretchen—who looks like me, only very, very pretty, because, she looks like her father. And all, this my friends, because of the small nest egg."

Then suddenly the letters ceased and, although the doctor and his wife wrote again and again, there was no reply.

Evil days had fallen, though they did not know it. Gretchen had been injured in a hospital fire and would never nurse again. There was sickness all around with a narrowing of the home circle, and surely, she argued, no news was better than sad news. Much better wait till matters mended and good times came again. But the years went, and matters, instead of mending, grew worse. The comfortable home had given place to one much smaller and of the household only she and Max remained, her own health gone and he slowly recovering from an accident.

Letters from the doctor and his wife had long ago ceased, but one morning the postman left an envelope, long and thin, in keeping with the quaint, scrawly writing inside, and Gretchen knew before opening it that she was to hear from her friends again. There were just a few words: "We are at Hotel La Croix. Come see us."

In an hour she was back, the doctor and his wife, genial and only a little older, busily keeping her step. "I've brought them to see you, Max," she announced, beaming. "I'm better, already, as you will be. And oh!" she cried in sudden remembrance, "I've kept the little nest, always and always. I intend—"

She stopped, startled. The old wife had dropped into a chair, gasping, her wide, wide eyes on Gretchen's face.

"I did let wee Gretchen play with it sometimes," she confessed. "It was when I was ill and couldn't bear her fretting. Besides, she was such a dear."

For a minute the doctor's face was blank as a wall then he thrust forward his chin and laughed till the room filled with the unaccustomed noise. "You kept it?" he questioned, his hands on his side. "You kept it?"

"Here it is," Gretchen produced it from her work basket and stood with it in her hand.

"It's—it's—a—diamond!" Surprise had weakened the old wife's voice. "A diamond!" the doctor repeated, "un-cut, but valuable. I—we—we thought you understood. It was for the lot, so your wedding day could precede 'kingdom come,' as afterward there would be no marriage or giving in marriage. Don't you remember?"

Gretchen stood quite still for a minute, then she flung herself on the floor by the couch, clasping Max in arms and sobbing. "I'm glad I didn't understand," she laughed, hysterically. "We'll sell it now. The money, my dear, will last till Max gets well."

"And something besides," And there was, for when the doctor and his wife made their next visit the cottage had received an addition and several distinct improvements.
