Chronic Cough May Be Tuberculosis

"One of the greatest problems confronting the Prince Edward Island Tuberculosis League is protecting children from the disease."

"It's fun to be with Mrs. Brown," Mary told her mother. "She lets me make fudge and tells me stories, but she hasn't been coughing since she was a child."

"Oh, yes, it's her bronchitis," replied the little girl. "Fortunately the child's tuberculosis had been discovered early by the doctor."

"Medical health examinations are necessary for the older members of the family as well as the children. Often the symptoms of tuberculosis are not easily recognized and may be confused with the symptoms of other diseases."

"The second meeting of the Bonshaw Teacher's Study Club, was held at the club centre, Bonshaw, Friday afternoon, Nov. 17th, with teachers from the various schools of Appin Road, Elmwood, New Argyle, Bonshaw and Riverdale, in attendance."

Reports were given on the Canadian History assignment for grades seven and eight, after which a general form of discussion took place in which all the teachers showed an active interest.

A paper, compiled by H. H. Court and W. A. MacPhee, on the Teaching of Language was read by the president, Erma A. Bain.

Several questions, with regard to the acquiring of good Oral and Written language form, some of which the teacher might adopt to compel herself to use good English and teaching to junior grade pupils the use of the dictionary, were ably discussed by all present.

After the next meetings assignment was given the meeting adjourned. No meeting will be held until spring, and of such, further notice will be timely given.

ALL IS BRIGHT

By ELEANOR BROWNE

Author of "This Time Forever," "Diane Looks at Life," "Highway to Romance," "A Christmas Cruise With Romance in The Wind..."

Elise Cattrell, "the woman in black" as Star had come to think of her, fumbled around in her trunk and she found the small box of medicines she always carried with her. Bandage, iodine—her fingers hesitated for a moment and then passed on. They said it burned; she didn't want to look distorted, and ugly. A tinner bottle. She took it out and closed the trunk carefully.

The little cabin was a perfect order. Jim had always called her an "old maid" for being so tidy. She smiled wryly as she considered how apt that description had been. Unconsciously her hand went to her hair and she straightened the small silver butterfly that nestled in the smooth waves. No longer black, but at night the gray seemed softer. Her skin looked smoother. Her eyes were almost as round and sparkling as they had been five years ago when she had met Jim.

Just about this time—about ten days before Christmas, Chicago all buried in snow, a picture-card of a woman and a man, the woman falling slowly, slowly—light wet kisses as they touched her face. How happy they had been, she and Jim, how they had loved each other!

Not yet. Not this year. Perhaps not next year—nor the next. Not yet. And then Jim's voice saying: "Darling, I've just got a telegram. I'm flying west tonight. She's very ill—dying—calling for me. They say she's rational. I'll let you know when it's over. I wish I could see you once more before I go."

"All is over meet me at AIRPORT FOUR THURSDAY." And those black minutes in the Number 4 car, standing with the few others who looked at you and at each other nervously as if they cried. "It's all right—just a delay—a few days longer."

"I'm flying west tonight. She's very ill—dying—calling for me. They say she's rational. I'll let you know when it's over. I wish I could see you once more before I go."

"I'm flying west tonight. She's very ill—dying—calling for me. They say she's rational. I'll let you know when it's over. I wish I could see you once more before I go."

Daily War Survey

The second civilian sea tragedy of the war was the sinking of the Dutch liner, Simon Bolivar, with the loss of some 140 persons.

The British liner, Athena, which took toll of 112.

Nazi propagandists will no doubt attempt to lay the responsibility for the Simon Bolivar sinking on Britain as they did in the case of the Athena, taking advantage of the impossibility of identifying the nationality of the mine.

The Athena was sunk by a submarine and the Simon Bolivar by a mine, apparently placed without notification in a channel followed by neutral shipping.

When they were able to advance the contention that the British Navy sank the Athena, a British ship, travelling between a British and Canadian port with hundreds of British subjects on board they can be expected to produce some story about the Simon Bolivar.

Reports of the sinking of four other ships by mines tended to confirm the view German sea warfare was becoming more ruthless.

Since the sinking of the Athena most of Germany's war activity on the seas has conformed fairly well with the rules of war and humanitarian considerations.

His in intensified sea warfare have been dropped from time to time from the resort to more desperate methods; will not be wholly surprising.

Majestic Radio In Canada Not Affiliated With U. S.

Several news items which have appeared in Canadian papers, quoting press dispatches from New York, involving the recent stock transactions of the Majestic Radio & Television Corporation and the financial affairs of the company, have not referred to connection with Majestic Radio in Canada.

The Majestic Radio trade-mark, engineering data, good-will, and Canadian assets, have not been referred to in connection with the Rogers-Majestic Corporation ten years ago and since then the Majestic Radio has been entirely independent of the United States affiliations.

The present Majestic Radio & Television Corporation, which is undergoing voluntary reorganization in the U. S. is not the original Majestic Company, nor has it any affiliation with the Rogers-Majestic Corporation in Canada, which is wholly Canadian owned, and which engineers and produces its own Radios in Canada as well as the Rogers—the world's first Batteryless Radio.
