Quick relief for acid stomach

Acid Indigestion indicates too much acid in the Stomach.... The resultant misery will vanish speedily if you take a little Bisurated Magnesia (Bismuth in Magnesia) after eating, to improve the over-acid condition of the stomach.... This is better than relying on habit-forming Laxatives.... At all Drug Stores—in powder form, or in tablets for handy carrying.

What you need is

"Bisurated MAGNESIA"
"BISMUTH IN MAGNESIA"

It's a Protective Neutralizer—
NOT a Laxative

Veteran Broker New Lord Mayor Of London Town

LONDON, Nov. 5—(C.P.)—Officially a fanmaker, in actual business life a stockbroker, Sir Stephen Killick on Nov. 9 will become Lord Mayor of London and enter upon a year's tenure of one of the most ancient, august and colorful offices under the British Crown.

Like all his predecessors at Guildhall for centuries back Sir Stephen is member of one of the historic city companies, successors to the mediaeval trade guilds. In his case his nominal calling perpetuates the one-time lucrative art of making fans for milady's coquetry or adornment.

Actually the lord mayor-elect is a business man of Throgmorton Street and its environs of commerce and finance. He is senior member of the committee of the Stock Exchange to which he was elected 20 years of age. He is 73 years old and a widower. His daughter, Mrs. Stanley Greeland, will be Lady Mayoress.

The Lord Mayor of London has an official pedigree going back nearly 800 years. The nursery legend of Dick Whittington being "thrice Lord Mayor of London" is incorrect in two particulars, however. Whittington, in point of fact, was mayor of London City four times, the last occasion being in 1419, nearly 70 years before the word "Lord" was added to the title.

During his year of office the Lord Mayor ranks as an Earl, and assumes the robes of this Order when he seeks private audience with the King, which he is entitled by right to do at any time. Within the city his precedence is immediately after that of the Sovereign. The gates of that hoary old fortress known as the Tower of London must open to him at any hour of the day and night, and the password is sent to him daily. The tradition that no Lord Mayor should ever sleep outside the city during his year of office was rigidly followed until a few years back, when the reconstruction of the Mansion House made it necessary for the Lord Mayor to reside in one of the West-End hotels. Sir Charles Collett, who is now retiring, has been ill for some months and much of this time he has spent perforce at Southwold, in Suffolk.

The City of London clings jealously to its ancient privileges, not merely in regard to ceremonious matters, but in connection with modern public services. The "one-square-mile" as the city proper is often called, as its own police force who patrol a sort of island site within the area of some 75 miles under the care of the Metropolitan Police. The city has a whole retinue of legal officers of its own. Critics of the administration of London public services have often protested against this duplication of authority. Officials of the City Corporation receive such handsome salaries that it is argued they ought to cover the cost of superintendence of administration of London as a whole.

Apart from its revenue from local taxes the City Corporation is immensely wealthy, but few deny most of this money is devoted to worthy purpose. Several big items of Corporation income are brought together under the name of the City Cash. Out of this is paid the expense of the famous Lord Mayor's Banquet and various other functions.

For his direct personal expenses the Corporation votes the Lord Mayor $50,000 annually but a Lord Mayor rarely avoids the necessity of finding at least as much again out of his own pocket.

That Royle Girl

By Edwin Balmer

CHAPTER 35

JOAN VISITS KET

Clarke's boyhood association with his father consisted chiefly of serious, perfectly planned expeditions in company with a somewhat embarrassed parent who most inconsistently purchased confections which Calvin ordinarily was forbidden to eat between meals and who started out to talk to Calvin on the train, but who soon compromised by buying for himself "The Atlantic Monthly," and for Calvin, "The Youth's Companion." One journey was, of course, to Lexington and Concord; another was to Harvard Yard, where his father showed Calvin the room in Hollis which had been his own and which was later to be Calvin's when he was in Harvard College; at another time, they visited Beacon Hill and the State House and the Shaw Memorial, where Calvin read for himself the thrilling Latin, "Omnia Relinquit, Servare Rem Publican." They went to Old North Church, of course; to Bunker Hill and to the harbor into which was tipped the tea; and they shipped, afterwards, in solemn state of two at the Touraine Hotel.

Calvin always called them "great" days, but they did not make him more at ease with his father. He thought he was perfectly at ease with his mother; at least he felt able to tell her a good deal of what came into his mind and bothered him, but he did not actually bring many of his troubles to her. Instead, he tried to work them himself by referring to the principles with which she had supplied him.

"What do you think about this yourself, Calvin?" she customarily asked him, when he had appealed to her; and when he took thought and answered, she almost invariably said, "exactly. You knew it within yourself." So, naturally, he referred more and more to himself, and less to her; and he knew that it pleased her to have him leave home alone, head up and with eyes dry, to start at Phillips' Academy.

He roomed with a boy who cried, one night, from homesickness.

"I guess you'd feel bad, too," said the boy, defending himself, "if you lived more'n ten miles away."

Calvin made no reply, but wondered what difference fifty or ten miles made and what good it did to cry for your mother. He imagined his mother finding him in tears for her!

He entered, as had his father, fully into the activities of the school and "made" the track team; and with half of his class from the academy, he passed on into Harvard, where he rowed as had his grandfather, Calvin Clarke. Of course, he "made" one of the first tens of "The Institute of 1776," "Dicky" and "The Pudding" and lived, at last, exactly as had his father and grandfather before him, in the room in Hollis looking down the Yard.

In all this course, so long prepared for him and so long anticipated, and in the path which he since had followed, never had he been disturbed by any doubt that his education had been the best obtainable; never had he imagined that any one could feel actual contempt for the influences which had made him. They might, through envy, feign contempt, but they could not actually feel it, he would have thought; but that Royle girl had—she who had challenegd him, with that strange thrill in her voice, as to his right to speak for the State; she who had called him a "ready-made," not to be compared to Ketlar, and who had meant it; she who had set his heart to throbbing when she clasped his wrist and who had cut the mark in his skin.

Of course, she did not know what was behind him, he considered; and even if some one told her, she would be incapable of evaluating traditions and training utterly strange to her. She merely had cried out an hysterical contempt for him as an educated man who had had advantages denied to her and her friends.

Calvin imagined himself admitting to his mother that he had let that girl disturb him at all; and he imagined his mother's amazement at him.

Thus he sought to dismiss, finally, any thought of that Royle girl; but when he was in bed, with the light out again, he recalled that she had not yet made application at the jail for a visit to Ketlar and he wondered why. Was it because she did not want to or because Elmen might have told her to delay?

In either case, she was likely to appear soon, perhaps tomorrow, and so she would pass the Criminal Courts building on her way to the jail and, as likely as not, come up to the state's attorney's suite afterwards. Who knew?

Joan Daisy, having obtained permission from Elmen, did visit the jail on the next afternoon; she passed the steel door by which visitors, one by one, are admitted after inspection through a small, barred peep-pane, and she took her place in the queue of felons' friends shifting forward, singly, each to report the name of the prisoner he desired to see, his own name and his connection with the prisoner. Then, if it was found that his name was on the list approved for the prisoner, a card was issued.

Upon the list approved for Ket was Joan Daisy's name; so she obtained her pass, entered the elevator and was lifted, in company with two men and four women and a child, to a floor where the guard announced, "This is Ketlar's; and Cribben's, too."

One of the women, and the most miserable-looking, evidently was for Cribben, for she and Joan Daisy stepped out together; and the elevator, rising, left them shut in a small, tile-floored space completely enclosed by thick steel bars and gratings. A high, barred window to the west admitted a shaft of the sunlight of the cool, October afternoon; and Joan Daisy gazed up at the light thus shining between the bars and upon steel bars; bars and barriers, locks and gratings, guards everywhere.

A guard inspected Joan Daisy's card and also that of the woman who had come to see Cribben; and he swung back a section of the steel barrier, admitting them into a sort of corridor, barred behind and screend in front by a closely woven brattice of steel, painted white and pierced by small, square holes about a pencil's girth in size.

Voices spoke and the odor of sweat and tobacco smoke was on the steam-heated air, but at first Joan Daisy saw no one but the guards and her miserable companion who had come for Cribben. Joan Daisy did not realize that she had reached the visiting screen and that, on the other side, was a "bull pen"; but Cribben's friend had visited before, so she did not hold back with an air of expectancy. Immediately she pressed her nose against the grating, matched two of the little holes to her eyes and looked in.

The Agricultural Situation

The Agricultural Situation will again be the subject of a special report to be issued early in January, 1935 Even more complete information concerning agricultural conditions and markets both in Canada and other countries than was possible in the first report published last March will be provided.

Fourteen committees, the members of which are officers of the omnion Departments of Agriculture, and Trade and Commerce, who are working in co-operation with representatives of the Provincial Departments of Agriculture and Agricultural Colleges, are preparing the report. This year a greater effort is being made to secure more complete details on conditions in export markets and the nature of the competition which may be expected from other countries. The committees will submit the conclusions from the information they obtain at a conference to be held at the end of November, at which it is expected representatives of the different provinces will b. present The work this year, as last, is being carried on under the direction of a committee appointed by the National Advisory Committee on Agricultural Services.

PROMINENT HALIFAX PUBLISHER DEAD

HALIFAX, Nov. 5—(CP)—I. C. Stewart, publisher and philanthropist died at his home here yesterday bringing to a close a long succesful business career. A two-year illness which became acute a fortnight ago sapped his strength. He was 67 years old.

Mr. Stewart established and built up the Imperial Publishing Co. Ltd., being its first president and managing director. He founded the Maritime Grocer, trade magazine, which he later re-named the Maritime Merchant.

I.C. Stewart was a director of Brandram Henedson Limited, a valued member of the Halifax Board of Trade, and one of the promotors of the Nova Scotia Tourist Association in 1898.

He took a prominent part in religious, education and social activities in Halifax. He was a member of the Board of Governors of Dalhousie University and took a kindly interest in the work of the Children's Hospital and the School for the Blind.

Scalp Broken Out with Itchy Eruptions. Healed by Cuticura.

"My scalp was broken out in eruptions and a rash. It itched all the time and was sore and the rash would burn. My hair fell out and became thin and dry. I stayed in the house most of the time. I would lie awake nights and wish someone would tell me something that would give relief.

"Seeing an advertisement for Cuticura Soap and Ointment I sent for a free sample. After using, my scalp began to feel better so I bought more and in three months I was healed." (Signed) Miss Martha Moss, 48 West St. N., Thorold, Ont.

FALL WHEAT AND RYE AND HAY

The total yield of fall wheat in Canada in 1934 is now estimated at 7,002,000 bushels from 425,600 acres, a yield of 16.5 bushels per acre, as compared with 14,031,000 bushels from 559,000 acres, a yield per acre of 25.1 bushels in 1933. The 1934 production of fall wheat is the lowest in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics records dating from 1908, due chiefly to winter-killing and severe drought conditions in the countries of Ontario where most of the fall wheat is grown.

The production of fall rye in Canada in 1934 is estimated at 5,239,000 bushels, an increase of 1,785,000 bushels as compared with 1933. The increase is largely due to increased acreages in the Prairie Provinces.

Winter-killing of hay and clover meadows in Ontario, and severe drought which has seriously affected all provinces except Quebec and British Columbia, have resulted in the lowest hay crop on record, namely 9,884,000 tons, as compared with 11,443,000 tons in 1933. The first cutting of alfalfa yielded only 778,300 tons, as compared with a first cutting of 1,194,000 tons in 1933, this large decrease being also due to the severe winter and lack of moisture.

Endorses National Cheese Week

"There are several reasons why I take pleasure in endorsing National Cheese Week in Canada to be held from November 10th to 17th, promoted by the cheese industry of the Dominion" said Hon. Robert Weir.

"With the high quality of the cheese manufactured in Canada, and the low per capita consumption, which is less than 3 1-2 pounds, it would appear that Canadians do not fully appreciate the excellent food value of good cheese. Cheese consumption in Canada is far below that of other nations, particularly those of Europe, where it is a staple article of diet, the consumption there being from 10 to 16 pounds per head of population.

"Investigation has shown that cheese contains more nutriment with less waste than any other protein food. One of the largest buyers in the British Isles recently stated publicly that Canadian factory cheese is the best in the world. Last year 94.87 per cent of the Cheddar cheese graded in Canada were first grade. Therefore Canadian cheese should form a part of every well balanced diet."

SUDDEN DEATH OF RETIRED LUMBERMAN

MIAMI, Fla. Nov. 5 — (C P) — William Sheppard, 82, retired president of the Georgian Bay Lumber Company and the Northern Navigation Company, both of Canada, died here today.

Sheppard came here Friday by private railway car from Coldwater, Ont. He had been in failing health for six years and was accompanied to Miami by his physician and his son Leigh B. Sheppard.

Heading the Georgian Bay Company for 60 years, Sheppard also took an active part in various other enterprises, and was for many years a director of the Royal Bank of Canada.

Among the survivors are five sons, Leigh, Charles H., William J. Jr., R. Stanley, and Herbert L., and a daughter Mrs. F.M. Gray, and a brother, Thomas H. All of Canada.

The body will be sent tomorrow to Coldwater for burial.

B.C. LEADS IN RECOVERY

Pacific Province Has Increased Mine And Lumber Output.

(C. P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

MONTREAL, Nov. 4—In no part of Canada has recovery become more general than in British Columbia, it is stated in the monthly letter of the Royal Bank of Canada, released here today.

With the mines steadily increasing their volume of production, with the farms only slightly affected by the drought, with a substantial increase in the tourist trade optimism has become general. "but," the letter emphasizes, "it is the improvement in the logging and lumbering industries which has constituted the main element in the rapid recovery in British Columbia."

In 1932 lumber production was the smallest since 1927. Last July the scale was the highest in five years and amounted to 223,000,000 feet as compared with 181,000,000 feet in July 1933. For the year ended Aug. 31, 1934, total production reached 1,835,000,000 feet, an increase of 40 percent over the previous year.

Great Britain, the Orient, the British West Indies, South America, Egypt and Continental Europe have all taken larger quantities of British Columbia lumber than heretofore, the letter says.

Since May 1933, it is noted, water shipments of lumber from British Columbia have shown remarkable expansion as result of greatly increased demands largely from English and other British Empire markets. Industrial recovery in Great Britain greatly increased the requirements of lumber for all purposes, while the Ottawa agreements placed British Columbia mills in a strategic position to secure these orders. In 1933, British Columbia provided 85 percent of the British Empire purchases of Pacific coast lumber as against only 22 percent in 1927, 1928 and 1929.

The domestic demand for lumber has been low during the past three years as building operations have been greatly curtailed, it is pointed out. Business conditions in Eastern Canada have shown considerable improvement during the past year and there has been some increase in the demand for lumber. British Columbia mills are now better situated competitively to share in this trade as a result of heavy shipments of eastern softwoods overseas and to the concessions in long-haul freights recently made by the railways. With this renewed interest in domestic markets and the continuation of heavy shipments overseas "the outlook for the industry is more encouraging than for many years," the letter concludes.

CHINESE SMUGGLERS ROUNDED UP

NEW YORK, Nov 5—(C P)—Eighteen Chinese smuggled into the United States by a ring that allegedly has brought opium and orientals from Trinidad were found today by federal agents in the soundproof cellar of a deserted mansion in Keyport, N.J.

The Chinese, who had not seen daylight for a month, were brought to Ellis Island for examination. Arrests of the ring's leaders were reported imminent by Frank Igoe, supervising agent of the Eastern division.

Igoe led 20 federal men and state troopers, armed with guns and teargas bombs, into the old residence at Keyport, near Atlantic Highlands. They subdued five police dogs and then an agent with a sub-machine gun called to a negro guard, who promptly surrendered. He had been armed with two guns.

In the cellar, Igoe turned on a flashlight and the Chinese blinked. They were seated around a bowl of rice, which they said had been filled daily. Many, however, were weak from lack of sufficient food.

Federal agents said that members of the group who spoke English said they had been hidden in the hold of a freighter at Trinidad and that the crew brought them bits of food. Four who became ill were thrown overboard.

Drug Clerk Keeps Fit

Uses Dodd's To Prevent Illness

"I have been 10 years in the pharmacy business, in leading drug stores in Montreal," writes Arthur Mullin, Verdun, Que. "I have recommended Dodd's Kidney Pills and Diamond Dinner Pills hundreds of times, and sold thousands of boxes of them. I advised my customers that Dodd's Kidney Pills are a truly safe preventative for infections of the Kidneys, and Diamond Dinner Pills an excellent laxative. I have personally used them both for many years. I never wait to be sick. I take Dodd's Kidney Pills every two weeks for a few days at a time, and in this manner keep in perfect health." D2
