

CUTICURA HEALS LARGE PIMPLES

Caused Itching Burning, Also Disfigurement.

"My complexion was completely marred by pimples which varied in size. Some were large, hard and scaly, while others were just red and foisted. They caused an itching, burning sensation, also disfigurement. After using scores of remedies for over two years, with but little results, I sent for a free sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I was so pleased with the results that I purchased more, and after using two boxes of Cuticura Soap and one large box of Cuticura Ointment I was completely healed." (Signed) W. E. Blackburn, 20 Bellevue Ave., Toronto, Ont.

MILLER-PROCTOR WEDDINGS

Principals in Ceremony Are Miss Lyla Proctor and Dr. Miller, of N. S. Sanatorium.
(Halifax Herald)
The wedding took place at 6 o'clock Saturday evening, in St. Andrew's Church, of Lyla Alice, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Proctor, Henry street, and Dr. Arthur Frederick Miller, for twenty years past superintendent of the Nova Scotia Sanatorium, Kentville, and one of the best known medical practitioners in the province. The church wore a festal dress of ferns and sweet peas. Rev. H. B. Clark, the pastor, who returned Friday from Prince Edward Island, where he had spent his holiday, officiating. Miss Marjorie Payne, who has also been on holiday, returned expressly to preside at the organ, and rendered, in addition to the wedding march from "Lohengrin", and Mendelssohn's March, some carefully selected and beautiful voluntaries. Much interest has for obvious reasons been felt in the wedding, and friends have vied with one another in attentions to the bride-to-be, who, returning from New York after a long course of study under the best teachers of voice in the city, amazed even her most intimate friends by the power and richness of her dramatic soprano, which under wise tuition had developed beyond the highest expectations of any of those familiar with its early promise. Dr. Miller is, as has been intimated, so well known professionally and so highly esteemed that further reference to his prominence and popularity is superfluous.

THE BRIDAL DRESS

Miss Proctor, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a beautiful gown of white moire and silver, and a bridal veil of Italian lace which has been for fifty years in the family, carrying a bouquet of orchids and cream colored sweet peas, tied with ribbons of cream and silver. She had three attendants—a brides-maid, Miss Beatrice McGill, a little flower girl in the engaging person, of Miss Margaret McKay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. McKay, and a wee page, Master Warren Shannon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lee A. Shannon. Miss McGill wore an extremely pretty gown of orchid georgette over silver, and silver and orchid hat of mohair, carrying a bouquet of salmon pink sweet peas. The little flower girl's frock was of gold taffeta, with which she wore a poke bonnet of the same color, with dainty touches of mauve, and she carried a basket filled with sweet peas, and rose petals which were strewn in the way of the bride, Master Warren Shannon was a gallant little figure in coat and trousers of orchid satin and white frilled shirt. Norman E. McKay attended as groomsmen, and the ushers were Stanley Clark, of St. John, and Frederick Nash, of Berwick, both Mr. McKay and Mr. Nash being nephews of Dr. Miller.

RECEPTION AFTER CEREMONY

The ceremony was followed by a reception at the residence of the parents of the bride, for which a large number of invitations were issued. The house was lavishly decorated in honor of the occasion, the flowers used in the adornment of the drawing room being yellow gladioli, while yellow candles in silver candlesticks were other decorative details. In the dining room the decorative touches were provided by pink and white sweet peas, pink candles, and silver candlesticks. Mrs. Proctor, mother of the bride, who wore a smart gown of beige lace over pink satin, with black hat and corsage bouquet of pink roses, was assisted in receiving by Mrs. F. J. Nash, of Charlottetown, and tea was poured by Mrs. N. E. McKay, in the group assisting were Mrs. Lee A. Shannon, Mrs. W. B. McKay, Dr. Eva Mader, and the Misses Jean Shaw, Madge Beckwith, Alberta Vickery and Margaret Buckley.

THE WEDDING TRIP

Dr. and Mrs. Miller left this morning for Montreal, whence they will sail by the Regina for Liverpool, contemplating a three months' trip, and proposing to visit during their absence, France, Italy, Switzerland, Belgium, as well as England and Scotland. The bride wore for travelling an exceedingly smart costume of golden brown silk velvet, with Paris pattern hat and brown fox fur the gift of her parents, the gift of the groom being a Hudson seal coat border of Fitch fur. They are followed on their wedding trip by the best wishes of all who know them, the one regret in connection with the wedding being that the future home of the bride will not be in Halifax.

MILDRED BARBOUR

CHAPTER 43

THE INEVITABLE ENCOUNTER

Lila breathed easily again. She and Herbert were happy once more. There was no ugly hovering between them. Uncle Dan, who was now speeding westward, had fulfilled his role of datus ex machina with complete success. Except for the menacing presence of Jack Farquhar, she would have been completely happy. Jack had called the day following her haughty dismissal of him. She had instructed Siddons with some malicious satisfaction. It wouldn't hurt to punish Jack for his hasty and offending words, she thought. He was entirely too masterful and exacting. Once those very qualities had thrilled her; in Herbert they thrilled her still, because she loved him. But, in a man for whom she had no longer the slightest sentimental interest, they were distinctly wearisome and annoying. She was meeting Dorothy at a picture-gallery for an exhibition opening, and, the day being fine and full of the promise of summer, she walked briskly along the Avenue. At Fifty-seventh street she was forced to wait at the curb for the change in the flow of traffic. A voice spoke her name.

"Miss Latham—Lila? Aren't you going to speak to me?"

She turned to look up into the face of Gilroy Holmes. Her heart dropped to the toes of her smart pumps. The inevitable meeting had occurred.

"I'm very glad to see you," he said soberly, taking off his hat. "I was almost on the point of calling at your house."

She gasped. "You—you know then?"

His look of surprise warned her. Of course, he meant her father's house.

She corrected herself hastily: "What I meant to say was: you know that Jack has some absurd idea about our—our—"

He nodded.

"He thinks I did the rotten trick of courting you, after he was reported missing in France. I can't convince him otherwise. He refuses to listen to me, or to see me, any more. It distresses me very much. He was my best friend—I'm awfully fond of him."

"I'm sorry," Lila answered sincerely. "I've tried, too, to make him see how fantastic it all is. He overheard a woman friend of mine teasing me 'about—about a 'past' I had in France—all nonsense, you understand. It's really too foolish to explain. Somehow the name of Holmes got mixed up in it, and Jack leaped to conclusions."

"I see," said Holmes, who didn't see at all. "Well, please do what you can to persuade him. You can do it, if any one can. He's as mad about you as ever." He smiled a trifle ruefully. "May I come to see you sometime, or do you think that might lend color to Jack's suspicion?"

"I'm almost sure it would," she said hastily, thankful for the excuse to keep him from calling at her father's house. "Good-by. It's been nice to see you. I'm sure we'll meet again soon."

In her heart, she was praying that they wouldn't. They parted, going in opposite directions. Neither of them was aware that atop an Avenue bus that had passed as they stood on the sidewalk was Jack Farquhar, who had just been refused admittance at the home of Mrs. Herbert Ware.

Farquhar's keen eyes had picked them out of the crowd. His handsome lips had tightened, and a dull flush of anger had crept into his lean dark face.

So! Lila was turning him down for Gilroy Holmes! Instead of receiving her fiancé at the home of her friend, she was parading the friend, the friend who had betrayed him. It never occurred to Farquhar that the meeting between Lila and Holmes was a chance encounter; he saw it only as an appointed rendezvous.

And this was the girl who had pledged herself to him in France. This was also the girl who had engaged herself to another man, excusing her conduct by telling a cock-and-bull-story of saving her father from financial ruin!

Something, thought Farquhar, bands and teeth clenched, had to be done—and quickly.

He made up his mind. He would go, without Lila's knowledge, and call on Mrs. Herbert Ware herself and enlist her aid in making Lila see how reprehensible her conduct was.
