N. D. MacLean UNDERTAKER EMBALMER Charlottetown and North Westshore Phone 149

Refutes Claim For Ancient Egyptian Embalming Methods

That embalming as practised by the ancient Egyptians is a "lost art" and that the ancients were more skilful in this respect than the moderns was refuted last evening by Mr. N. D. MacLean in an interesting address on "The Funeral Profession" at the weekly meeting of the Gyro Club. "You no doubt have heard," said Mr. MacLean, "that the ancient Egyptians were highly proficient in the art of embalming and that the secret of this art is unknown to modern science, and I have been asked many times why we cannot embalm as well as the Egyptians? But such is not the case, we have been able to find out that Embalming was practised by them in a crude manner over 4000 years ago. "Joseph died, being 110 years old and they embalmed him and put him in a coffin in Egypt, so reads the oldest of all histories. It took the embalmers of Egypt 70 days to embalm and prepare the body of Joseph and the cost was in the vicinity of $10,000.00 of our present currency. "Frequently the question is asked, "Can present day embalmers prepare a body as well as one treated by the Ancient Egyptians?" The average person looks upon the embalming practice of Egypt as a lost art, many a historian who ought to know better is also led astray by this misconception of the facts.

Modern Methods "With the discovery of arterial system modern arterial embalming began. Do you know that there is no mutilation in present embalming? Merely the finest incision in which the fluid is injected into the arteries. There are several arteries that can be used, the fluid after being injected going all through the system by means of the arteries and veins. "Today embalming is practised for sanitation, preservation and cosmetic effect. For sanitation, because embalming destroys all germs in a body thus helping to stop the spread of disease. For preservation, because our present generation are great travellers and often a body has to be shipped a great distance before being finally interred. For cosmetic effect, because a body that has been embalmed will look far better than one that has not been embalmed. "The present day embalmer is being continually exposed to diseases of all kinds, diphtheria, scarlet fever, typhoid fever, smallpox and etc. Yet he goes about his work fearlessly. His greatest enemy is septic poison. Every year numerous embalmers pay the price with their lives through septic infection. "Mr. MacLean's address covered the whole field of his professional activities and proved of unusual interest.

A vote of thanks was moved by Mr. Stewart Jones, seconded by Mr. Harry Richardson and presented to Mr. MacLean by the Chairman, Mr. Leo Doucette. The word "Funeral", Mr. MacLean explained, means tosh light procession and is supposed to have been derived from the Latin word "funis" meaning torch, because funerals among the Ancient Romans took place at night, so that the magistrates and priests might not be violated by seeing a corpse and so be prevented from performing their sacred duty. A vote of thanks moved by Mr. Stewart Jones, seconded by Mr. Harry Richardson, was extended to the speaker by the chairman, Mr. Leo Doucette.

Not A Lost Art

"Embalming as practised in Egypt never has been a lost art. But this practice never was suitable to the climate or agreeable to the customs of Europe and this country. Ancient embalming was not much different from the preparation and curing of a ham or shoulder of bacon. It was purely a process of pickling and drying out. A well qualified embalmer of today equipped with the discoveries of modern science can embalm a body far better in a couple of hours than could the ancient Egyptian in 70 days. "The success of the ancient Egyptian embalmer, depended upon a combination of pickling and climate. Climate after all was the greater factor. It accomplished the drying out of the body and kept the tissues dry. Mummies that have remained in perfect preservation in Egypt for thousands of years, if brought to this country and unwrapped would absorb moisture and in a short space of time give off an offensive odor and decay. The Pyramids of Egypt if brought to this country would soon crumble away and fall to dust. "The Egyptian method of embalming was as follows. The body was placed on a stone slab, the thorax and abdominal cavities were then opened, a line being drawn where the incision was to be made, then one of the parasites, who were considered unclean and treated as outcasts, opened the body with

Socialist Sees Germany's Decline

BERLIN, Jan. 18 - (A.P.) - Adolf Hitler, National Socialist leader, told a meeting of 5,000 Berlin students tonight that unless the nation's "dissent elements" became united and put an end to "Jewish Bolshevism and internationalism" Germany within the next 40 years would become a "Nation of language teachers and museum guides." The leader of the Fascist Nazis urged the students to take an active part in the Nazi movement. He told them they could all become leaders if they saw the future, not in terms of "paled knowledge, but in action." Declaring a decisive moment in Germany's history had come and blaming "Marxism" for Germany's "decay," Hitler said that "if the present process continues, Germany within 30 years will no longer be a decisive factor in the world's affairs."
