Contract Bridge

By Josephine Culbertson

"OSTRICH" TACTICS

When a defender sees that one of his kings is trapped under an A-Q tenace, there is little to be gained by "playing the ostrich and burying his head in the sand." The application of this question may become clearer when we go into the following deal.

South dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ 4 3 2 ♥ A Q 10 9 3 ♦ 3 2 ♣ 8 5 4
♠ 10 9 7 6 ♥ K 8 ♦ J 10 9 7 5 ♣ K 10	N W E S	♠ Q 8 ♥ J 7 5 4 ♦ A 8 4 ♣ Q J 9 6
	♠ A K J 5 ♥ 6 2 ♦ K Q 6 ♣ A 7 3 2

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♥	Pass
2 N T	Pass	3 ♥	Pass
3 N T	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened the diamond jack. East put up the ace and returned the suit, declarer winning with the king.

The heart six was now led toward dummy, and West automatically followed suit with the eight-spot. After deep thought, declarer put in dummy's nine and, for all practical purposes, the defenders' interest in the proceedings ceased then and there! If East took the trick with the jack declarer could later run the entire heart suit; but even when East, recognizing this fact, made the good play of holding up the jack, he could not undo all the damage. Declarer had assured himself of three heart tricks, by virtue of West's king dropping on the ace, and these, with the three spades, two diamonds and one club that declarer took in his own hand, added up to the comfortable total of nine tricks.

The fact that this contract was fulfilled was due exclusively to West's aforesaid "ostrich tactics." Surely, West could see that his heart king, placed as it was, had no great value as a trick or a stopper. Nevertheless, put to the right use, that same heart king could have struck a valiant blow for the defense. West should have played the king on the first lead toward dummy without the slightest hesitation! Observe that this would positively hold the declarer to two heart tricks and consequently would defeat the contract. If West was permitted to win the trick with the king, declarer would later make only the ace and queen of hearts. If the ace was played on West's king, declarer would be in no better position.
