ELLEN'S DIARY

ered about the same spots, floating gracefully above and then suddenly diving with serious intent, but somehow their screams were not so ominous today and the glint of sunlight shed a brightness from their silver wings.

Polly, my new helper took over the place vacated by Julie, last Autumn and went to the Saturday's cleaning. Very quiet, I suspect it is quite as bothersome to break in a new mistress as it is to adjust oneself to the ways of a new helper. There were signs that Jeanie was tidying up the house across the lane, from the aftermath of Mr. D's decorating. Rugs were being dusted at a door and when I went across on an errand, there was a fetching smudge of flour on a lady's cheek, very clear in the flush resting there, the result of her culinery efforts "for Sunday." Karolyn said she "hadn't had time to breathe all day" when she and Jamie came a-visiting this evening and she sank down into the comfortable haven of James' old armchair with obvious content —but not for long. She must accompany James on a round of inspection of stables and sties. "Did you ever see the small pigs beside their mothers, as cosy and quiet at this time of night?" she asked me when she returned.

* * *

Have I not—often? And taken in the peace of it, clean and warm in the newly placed bedding—straw, and all in keeping with the tranquility which is usual to farmsteads, after the dusk comes down. Rob, feeling the Spring urge for building and repairing, went as he said himself "to round up that carpenter of ours" with the intent of engaging in some such work, when a favorable opportunity presents itself. His carpenter is Mr. D. who lives some distance on the highway, in the direction of the city. Lonely now, since his good partner of years went to her last long home a few months ago. "He's a busy man" Rob said "what with brooder houses to build to house the Farmers' wives' chicks and so many other demands as well." As yet, there is no sign of the folks at Alderlea going more extensively into the poultry-farming, and so far, there is not even the sound of a cluck from a broody hen to encourage it. However, Mattie the duck has a brand new partner, white "from the crown of his head to the sole of his feet" almost, and with a lovely yellow bill for contrast. Un-named, although I believe "John" is favored— a sturdy dependable name.

The mail came today, bridging the interruption in delivery, that attended the storm. It brought a letter from Judy, breezy and full of chit-chat about her studies and her work. Learning to weave, she loves "to watch the charm of a pattern grow beneath her hands." She talks much about the Island and "It's a lovely season—the Easter one that's coming" she wrote "almost as good as Christmas."

* * *

So if this week, brought the annoyance of dark days and snow flurries it brought also much that was good. If some days were dreary there were nights like this one, when the moon lights up the surrounding countryside, lingering on the mill gables and rooves and on the dark pond waters. Some days. Summery skies were blue and white and the pond reflected its surrounding there —the huge heaps of rough-barked logs; the trees and the clouds. One evening, pleasant to remember, though we should have read the approaching storm signals there, but then it was so lovely we never noticed, Jamie came with his parents to celebrate Jock's birthday. Jamie had his hands full of pussy willows, that he had gathered on the way.

These went in an old blue vase "of my mother's" to decorate the festive table. Mattie's hybrid son and a plump chicken awaited James' and Karolyn's carving and after grace, Jamie wondered if "ducks have gizzards, the same as ganders do" and lost no time in verifying his suspicions. Polly came one afternoon to help turn the wheels of industry at Alderlea. "Indeed it's very good, she is" I said to James this evening when he hinted (and could I blame him?) that since I had help indoors, I might perhaps give him a hand with the milking. We were exchanging confidences in the privacy of the stable, the two cats on a broad sill and Pard alert and wistful at the open door being no hindrance. "A new broom, Ellen" he said hitching his stool a bit nearer to Mary the jersey, "sweeps clean." True it is, and true is The Word that is read and taught to the faithful in Island churches tomorrow — when again the peace of the Sabbath comes "blessed and hallowed"

Until Monday — Diary —Goodnight.

FILM ENJOYED —The film, the "Red Wagon", was viewed at the Charlottetown Hotel recently with much interest by a large and appreciative audience. Depicting the growth of the giant meat-packing business of Swift and Company from the beginning when the founder of the business, G. Franklin Swift, started out in a red delivery wagon, the picture traced the development of Swift's to its present status as the largest meat-packing company in the world.

POSITIVE MOOD IN FICKLE SEASON

NEW YORK—The early coming of spring has sent women into a positive mood in the matter of suits and coats for this fickle season. From that step to a decision in the matter has been an easy one as shops offer all types of suits from tailored tweed in three pieces to dressmaker suits.

First step, however, is to make up your mind as to "the look" you are determined to achieve for yourself. Will you choose the tweed to be worn with a rough straw and striped blouse or do you crave a soft dressmaker type, ruffled blouse flowersladen hat and high-heeled pumps?

PLENTY OF CHOICE IN HATS

NEW YORK—The crownless hats the bulky hats, the flower laden hats, as well as the sturdy derby types should give every woman her choice. Come summer, the cartwheel is promised in all its ravishing beauty. The small hat is larger than it was, something more than a smack on the head and less than a standard sized sailor. Whatever a hat should be, it should not be standard. Large enough to be dramatic or small enough to be interesting is about the right size in any hat at any season.

This year is no exception. You may have a straight brim, pure white low-crowned sailor with frill or black veiling on it, and wear it with easy conscience and a smart air.

MALTESE EDUCATION

In Memoriam

In fond and loving memory of our dear son, A. B. John Francis Howatt, who departed this life April 20, 1944.
We often think of the days gone by
When we were all together;
A shadow over our lives is cast,
Our loved one gone before.
Tonight the stars are gleaming
Upon a lonely grave;
There sleeps without dreaming,
One we loved, but could not save.

Quebec Legislature Prorogued Yesterday

QUEBEC, April 17—(CP)— The second session of Quebec's 22nd Legislature—the shortest in years—was prorogued today by Lieutenant-Governor Sir Eugene Fiset in a brief ceremony in the spacious council room.

Sir Eufene read the Throne Speech after both Assembly and Council had handled the remaining legislation at brief morning and afternoon sittings. All bills not previously sanctioned were given royal assent by the Lieutenant-Governor, after which he prorogued the session.

The most controversial bill of the session —the Government measure to insure the progress of education by settlement of financial problems of school commissions—was approved by the Council after an Opposition motion asking that the bill be amended in committee was rejected 10 to nine.

The Throne Speech referred to the reconvening next week of the Dominion-Provincial conference, stating that the Government "was pleased to reiterate its irrevocable decision to see to it that the rights and prerogatives of the province, which are recognized by the Canadian constitution, shall be fully protected."

When Throat Clogs Germ-Laden Phlegm must be cleared out

You may speak of it as only a slight cold, but just the same your cold may be spreading downwards. Cold that infects the Bronchial tubes if not controlled, can go further. We all know there are types of cold that mean a prolonged illness. Before your cold creeps any deeper, help to rout it out with Polson's Cough Syrup. Remember, an excess of mucus in the head or throat soon blocks the nasal passages and leads to a rapid spread of infection. This soothing remedy helps to clear the throat and breathing organs of much surplus bacteria-infected mucus. This starts you on the road to better health.

No matter how "stuffed-up" you may be with cold, a cough or bronchitis, look for quicker relief from Polson's Cough Syrup; it is a most successful antidote to the common Cold. Sold by all good Chemists in 35c bottles.

Dorothy Dix Says—

body gets tired of being flattered and yes-yesed and told they are world wonders, they think that they are predestined mates.

Only too often, almost before the ink is dry on the wedding certificate, they find out that their destiny is either the divorce court, or one of the domestic war marriages that does not even have an armistice in it. Any engagement, intelligently used, should prevent most of the matrimonial tragedies, for few husbands and wives are villains who deliberately mistreat their mates. They are just uncongenial souls who get on each other's nerves.

Surely any man with sense enough to conduct a peanut stand should be able to make a fair estimate, after even a month's engagement to a girl, of whether she was just a pretty nitwit, or had a few brains under her hairdo, and whether she would make a good wife and mother, or just be one of the perpetual babes who expect to spend their lives going to the movies and night clubs, and who work their husbands to death to buy them things they can't afford. And how any girl can keep steady company with a boy for even a week without finding out whether he bores her to death, or is an entertaining companion, passes comprehension.

The moral of all of which is that if an engaged couple spent their time in asking each other: "How much salary do you get?" And: "How do you stand on the wife's allowance question?" And: "Are you a good cook?" Instead of: "Do you love me?" "Will you always love me?" there would be fewer divorces.
