quiet. Many died en route and others escaped from the lagoon or died. Five of the captives, now in captivity are berried females, and it is the intention of the biologists of the Fisheries Research Board to carry them through the winter and endeavor to hatch eggs and rear larvae.

May Not Survive

Difficulty at present seems to be that while the lobsters grow and apparently thrive, mate and produce eggs, it has not yet been determined whether the eggs will hatch and if so whether the young born in British Columbia coastal waters will survive. They are being closely and scientifically observed and it is hoped that more definite data on these points will be obtained next season. Although officials of the Dominion Fisheries Department here in Ottawa declined to be quoted on the subject, they intimated that possibly it was just as well for the Atlantic lobster industry that the British Columbia experiment has not so far proven a success. They cited many examples of problems which occur when species are introduced into new waters or land animals to a new country. A classic example of over-successful transplanting of fish, one recalled, was in Peru, where ordinary speckled trout grew to five feet in length, because of access to navigation and even life in certain lakes and felled totally in the original purpose which was to provide good angling and choice fish food.

Best-known example of this disturbance of the biological balance is the introduction of rabbits into Australia, where they speedily became a scourge and cost millions of pounds annually to control. Another recent example is the plague of Canadian muskrats introduced some years ago into eastern Germany and Poland.

Despite the lack of success which has so far attended the east-west lobster movement, neither the Dominion Government nor the fish-packing industry on the Pacific is discouraged, and plans are being made to extend the present hatch in West coast waters and see whether the young will flourish.

CLOSURE TONIGHT

ity is 75,000 gallons, be filled today and that a tap be inserted to permit those still at Maple Hills to have plenty of water for the next two months.

Mr. Connolly said he understood the Maritime Electric Light Company may still supply light and power to the seven families who have purchased their homes. This will be done by installing individual meters which will not have to be removed since those families will be utilizing the services of the company at their new locations. But after midnight to-night the Government, Mr. Connolly said, will not be responsible for further costs of any kind at Maple Hills.

The four families who have no other accommodations in prospect at present will have every assistance his department can give them to secure other quarters. Mr. Connolly said. He added that during the last 27 months approximately 200 families have lived at one time or other at Maple Hills and that all had found other accommodations. It seemed unlikely, he concluded, that those four would not be able to do the same thing.

CROP DAMAGE

wrecked 13 houses at Pompano, eight miles north of Fort Lauderdale.

Eighteen persons were removed from wreckage of houses at Pompano. There were no severe injuries.

In Fort Lauderdale, a tornado sliced the second story of a house. Opa-Looka, northwest of Miami, reported a tornado wrecked two houses there.

Havana, Cuba, got the brunt of the hurricane. In Miami and Miami Beach, damage was light.

A flood threat grew in the South Florida area as a deluge brought by the hurricane reached 7.24 inches in the six hours ending at 7 P. M.

Earlier today, the hurricane lashed Havana with winds of 132 miles an hour. Cuba reported crop damage of $6,000,000, at least six persons killed and more than 200 injured in Havana.

Southeast Florida feared the storm more than ordinarily because it brought torrential rains to an area already badly flooded. A fire broke out during the height of the storm at nearby Miami Beach. It gutted the New York Meat Market and destroyed a photo shop next door. Firemen estimated damage at $100,000.
