Covered With Boils on Arms, Neck and Neck

Miss Margaret Higgins, Dymont, Ont., writes: "I was covered with boils on my arms, face and neck. I used plasters and other remedies with no results. My attention was drawn to Burdock Blood Bitters, so I decided to get a bottle. The results were marvellous, as in no time the boils had completely disappeared, and my skin was clearer and fresher than ever."

FINANCIAL EXECUTIVE REGULATE HOME LIFE

NEW YORK, Feb. 4.—The Herald Tribune says:

"Hungarian financial executives apparently subscribe to a different school of social psychology and human motivation from that obtaining in other countries. The Budapest banks according to the newspaper AZ EST, have just established a maximum for the number of children an employe may have, the limit being usually fixed at four. Other enactments provide summary dismissal for employes who contract secret marriages.

"Banking practice has always regarded married employes as steadier and safer. The custom, said to prevail in big financial institutions, of keeping an eye on their employes in leisure hours, would be, obviously, superfluous in the case of the married clerk. He has created his own discipline to keep him away from the temptation to live beyond his means. But it may be that the Hungarian bankers have gone deeply into the subject and discovered that, in respect to the progeny of bank clerks, there is what the scientists call an optimum number, beyond which children cease to be a force for good.

The arrival of a fifth child may have been ascertained by measurement and questionnaire to be just the point where a husband father becomes dangerous to the bank's cash."

Western Women Report Progress

CALGARY, Alta., Feb. 4.—(By The Canadian Press)—"What is going to be the standard of living we are going to have in the prairie provinces during the next two years?" asked Premier Brownlee of the United Farm women of Alberta in annual convocation here. "This is the question I put to the women of Alberta. Are we going to curtail education, close hospitals and give up all we have fought for. I think, personally, this is false economy and I appeal to the women of Alberta to insist on the maintenance of the services in the face of the un-reconciling demands for an immediate reduction in taxation. There are some things more important to men and women than the mere possession of a few dollars at once." In the last analysis governments bow to the will of the people, he concluded.

Hon. Perron Baker said: "I have an idea that we look over the practical results achieved by the U. F. A. and U. F. W. A. in the past I think that we will find that the greatest number of practical suggestions for betterment of life for the people of Alberta have originated right down here in the basement where the women's convention is held."

He expressed a hope that the women following this aptitude for practical things will find more things concerning the practical welfare of each community in which there is a local U. F. W. A. with which to deal in the coming year. He said he had often felt a weakness in the U. F. A. organization was that it dealt with general questions and left out of consideration those things near and home which might be improved by the individual locals. To the practical section of the convention he commended this suggestion.

Voicing an eloquent appeal for the tax supported municipal hospital, Hon. George Hoadley, minister of health, addressed the convention. Holding up the ideal of Alberta as a province in which every municipality has its hospital and every mother, when she leaves that hospital with a new baby, can face the future without a heartbreaking burden of debt, he commended province wide hospitalization to the farm women of Alberta as a practical objective toward which they may work. Applause greeted Mr. Hoadley's declaration that should there be a standard hospital tax of say, $4.80 on every quarter section, never more, never less, instead of the present fluctuating mill rate. In answer to a question Mr. Hoadley said that he believed that a first class doctor with special training in obstetrics could be maintained in the municipal hospital at $12 per quarter section. He also stated that as Minister of Health he was urging special diplomas for doctors with special training in obstetrics, asking the co-operation of the medical men of the province and the university.

The report on laws affecting women and children presented by Mrs. F. E. Wyman, convener of the committee on legislation, was one of the most important of the entire convention. In the 1926 provincial election 40 percent of all votes cast were cast by women. The same percentage with a slight increase held good in the provincial election of 1930. The number of men voting in 1930 showed an increase of 5.3 percent over the 1926 record. The increase in the number of women voters over 1926 was more than 10 percent.

Critics Speak Well Of "Tantivy Towers"

LONDON, Feb. 4.—(By The Canadian Press)—"Tantivy Towers," which had its first production recently at the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith, London, of which Sir Nigel Playfair, noted actor, is lessee and manager, is highly commended by the London critics. One of these Alfred Kallish, music critic for The News-Chronicle, says that the lyrics in the opera are the best since W. S. Gilbert's time. The Times critic praises the music more than the lyrics, and refers to some of it as "nearly Sullivan."

The book and lyrics of "Tantivy Towers" are by A. P. Herbert, dramatic author, and the music is by Thomas F. Dunhill, composer, professor at the Royal College of Music here.

The libretto and the lyrics of Mr. Herbert are the most brilliant known to the English stage since the days of W. S. Gilbert. The News-Chronicle critic says. The music of Mr. Dunhill, in spite of occasional lapses in over-seriousness, is, on the whole, sparkling and melodious. It improves markedly as the opera progresses.

"Whatever else it is or is not, "Tantivy Towers" is certainly an opera," says The Times critic, who refers to this as "the satisfactory thing, because the slight thread of its story and the lyrics, jovial, satirical, and sentimental by turns, leave plenty of room for the music. Indeed the whole thing is carried forward by the music (there is no spoken dialogue), and if the music had not that versatility which Mr. Dunhill displays, its three acts would hang fire, which in fact they never do. Jennie Jay's first song, "Where the merry artists gather," is nearly Sullivan. It is conspicuous because, for the most part, the music keeps clear of the jazzy jerk which would naturally accompany gas balloons and streamers."

The story of "Tantivy Towers," briefly told, is as follows:

At a birthday party in Chelsea Lady Ann Gallop, the daughter of the Earl of Tantivy falls in love with Hugh Heather, the celebrated tenor. Jennie Jay, a painter, falls in love with Charles Viscount Harkway, the son of the Earl of Tantivy. Heather and Jenny find themselves, in the second act, as guests at Tantivy Towers on the night of the Hunt ball. Lady Ann is engaged to Captain Barback, the master of the Hunt. In the third act the Earl of Tantivy, being unable to follow the Hunt because his daughter has jilted Captain Barback, goes shooting, and meets Heather and Lady Ann. The Hunt passes, and Heather shoots the fox—whereupon Lady Ann boxes his ears and returns to her allegiance to the Master of the Hounds, and Heather goes back with his Jennie to Chelsea.

The Times critic says: "Tantivy Towers" is fortunate in its cast. Trefor Jones is a real tenor, and Lady Ann can be excused for imagining herself in love with his voice. Harvey Braban, as the M. F. H., not only looks as though he would ride straight, but sings straight, and was particularly successful in getting his words across. Roy Russell and Miss Doris Woodall, as the Earl and Countess, are worthy of their titles, and Miss Barbara Pett Fraser, as Lady Ann, was pleasantly alluring, especially when she engaged in the task of making friends between her two antipathetic lovers."

BETTER BEEF WANTED

Through its contacts with the Beef Grading Service of the Dominion Department of Agriculture is very closely in touch with consumer preferences for beef. One thing clearly apparent in the market at the present time is the demand for better beef.

In a recent sale of beef cattle by the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa got the top of the current market at Montreal. These cattle were two year olds, weighing an average of around 1210 pounds, dressing out an average of 725 lbs., or around 59 percent. On the racks in the coolers of the Montreal wholesaler who bought them they were graded. Of the lot of 20 nine graded Red Brand, and 11 Blue.

The wholesaler's comment on this lot of cattle was pertinent and illuminating. "We can sell all that kind of cattle we can get," he declared. "The trouble with most of the good cattle coming into this market, and other wholesale markets, is that they lack just a little in finish. Fed another month they would improve in quality sufficiently to be worth easily 2 1-2 cents a pound more to the producer. We can sell all the good beef we can get, our trouble is we can't get enough of it."

The market preference today is for well finished young cattle weighing around 900 to 950 pounds live weight dressing out around 525 pounds. It is this type of animal, properly finished, which means money to all concerned from the range to the table.

WOMEN RECEIVE PHYSICAL TRAINING

(Canadian Press)

TORONTO, Ont., Feb. 4.—The University of Saskatchewan is the only one of nine Canadian universities which allows its women students credit for physical training equal to those which may be obtained in any other subject, according to a census of the universities taken by Dr. Edith Gordon, Medical Advisor for women at Toronto. All the other colleges, McGill included, either provide no physical training at all, or provide a one or two year compulsory course for which no credit is given. At McGill, where the course in physical training is recognized as one of the best on the continent, no credit at all is given, although four years of gym work is required from all before graduation.

Some of the universities have a much more fully developed health and infirmary service than is in practice at Toronto. Each student pays a small yearly fee, in return for which they receive medical and hospital attention up to a cost of $150 to $200. Besides this, many schools have an infirmary to be used in the case of minor illnesses, with a trained nurse in constant attendance.

May Rebuild London Within Fifty Years

LONDON, Feb. 4.—(By The Canadian Press)—A bold scheme to rebuild the Metropolis so that 50 years hence there will be tall, airy buildings in London, and no traffic problems to solve as at present, is suggested by Major H. E. Crawford, ex-M.P., a member of the Royal Commission on Transport. Major Crawford thinks the only way to solve the traffic question is by practically rebuilding the Metropolis, and he has a scheme mapped out—a far reaching and ambitious one, which would take perhaps 50 years to complete—whereby there would be no more traffic chaos here.

Major Crawford's plan includes making all improvements in roads and buildings serve the cause of traffic reform from the one-third mile of the heart of the City.

"Imagine the delays that are caused in transport of goods from the rapidly developing centres of Middlesex to the other side of London," Major Crawford said in a recent interview. "Imagine the mile-long queues of lorries waiting to enter the docks, the impossibility of executing an urgent errand in a car in many parts of London, and the unhappy lot of working girls who have to travel to their business standing 15 in a carriage. Then you can possibly visualize the immensity of this traffic problem.

"Instead of saying that certain kinds of traffic should not go here or there, we ought to meet the needs of the people and make it possible for the traffic to go where it is wanted.

"We ought to have in London an authority—it would have to be the London County Council—to co-ordinate the whole thing and with it the suggested Traffic Advisory Committee would co-operate. They would see that every improvement was carried out in relation to a given plan, and that there were proper approaches to railway stations and docks. They would begin where the demand for reform was most urgent—where congestion was greatest.

"A great new, wide avenue ought to run from somewhere about Holborn Viaduct, crossing Smithfield and Barbican and running north of Liverpool. It can visualize, in time to come, all vehicular traffic in the heart of the city—the third of a mile around the Bank—being forbidden except such traffic as is actually destined for buildings in that area.

"How much would all this cost? Well, Kingsway, that great, broad thoroughfare, cost nothing, because land was acquired and the whole thing was done on a business basis. The same could be done with all these schemes, and there would be

NEW DEVICE TAKES PHOTOGRAPHS AT TEN ONE-MILLIONTHS OF SECOND

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Feb. 4.—A new field of research was opened today when Massachusetts Institute of Technology announced the invention of a new type of Stroboscope, a device for "stopping" motion to study the behavior of machines operating at high speed.

Making photographic exposures at 10 one-millionths of a second the device, developed by Harold E. Edgerton of the M.I.T. research staff, permits "stop-motion" photograph of moving machinery.

So powerful is the new Stroboscope that still and motion pictures of a 160-horse power motor have been made while the machine was at full speed. Though the motor was turning at a rate corresponding to a ground speed of 95 miles an hour, every detail of the moving parts was shown as clearly as if the machine were idle.

The Stroboscope movies of this motor, believed the first ever taken, will be shown for the first time at the forthcoming convention of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers in New York.
