How to Grow New Skin!

Nothing is more wonderful than the human skin. It breathes through tiny mouths called pores. If it is kept whole and strong it improves the entire bodily health.

Those who know most about the complex structure of the skin appreciate the care that must be taken in deciding what is the safest, purest and best dressing to apply in time of accident or disease.

Much scientific thought and experiment was expended in the search for an ideal natural healing substance, but it has actually been found at last, in Nature's own storehouse of medicinal herbs.

Never in the world's history has there been another preparation like zam-buk. Amongst other virtues, it possesses that rare quality of actually growing new skin in Nature's own way.

A MIRACLE BEFORE YOUR EYES.

Healing the injured and diseased tissues by this precious herbal balm is a miracle that may be performed before your own eyes. Children remember zam-buk best for its great power in soothing and healing their hurts, whilst in the treatment of eczema, ringworm, chronic sores, ulcers and poisoned sores, zam-buk powerful antiseptic and tissue-building properties ensure success again, many thousands have zam-buk alone to thank for their complete release from torturing piles.

Differing fundamentally and in action from all ordinary ointments, zam-buk is free from animal fats and mineral compounds. It is highly refined and contains no ingredient which the skin cannot readily absorb. A fifty-cent box of zam-buk may save you dollars in doctors' bills. It is a unique preparation with a wonderfully wide range of usefulness.

The Wall Flower

BY MARION RUBINCAM

READJUSTMENT

Chapter 26

It was Pandora's pride that saved her finally.

At five, when she dared not stay in her room any longer, she got up and washed and dressed in her nicest white dress, combed her hair and rubbed and pinched her cheeks to force colour into them. Then with her chin held high, and her hands like ice she went down stairs.

"Well, you're a nice one, staying away from my party!" Gladys greeted her with great good humour. "Mother said you were tired—and here I've gone and gotten engaged while you've been sleeping!"

"Have you? I mean—I know. I'm glad," she managed to answer.

"You do know—did you hear us?"

"Oh—I've known a long time". Dora even managed to kiss Gladys, and to turn and offer her hand to Morton. She did not dare look at him.

If she had, she would have seen a queer mixture of confusion and regret.

"Mortie looks sheepish," Gladys cried, laughing at him. "Never mind, you'll get used to being engaged. Look at me, I'm used to it already."

And she went over to him and took his hand, a piece of wit which made her family laugh.

Aunt Maude disappeared to "get supper." And Dora followed, glad to escape from the rest of the company.

"You're fired, you go back to them, I can manage." Aunt Maude protested, feeling that Dora must be genuinely ill to look so. She remembered that the girl had gotten most of a big dinner alone.

"I've been overworking you," she said with a sudden feeling of conscience.

"No, I rather help". The girl had to have something to do, setting a table and slicing bread kept her hands busy and her mind employed. She could not go back to the other room.

But after supper she went to her room again. Gladys and Morton were in the parlour; the family, with somewhat obvious tact, had retired to the "sitting room"—in and about Norris City, one sat in the sitting room and kept the parlour sacred to guests.

Once in her room, there was not even the simplest task to keep her hands busy and her mind diverted there was nothing to do but think.

Finally she reached into the box where the locked diary lay, and took it out. The things that would not come out in words found expression there.

"Morton and Gladys are engaged," she began methodically. "I wonder why I did not see it coming."

She closed the book, and sat for a while at her window. Later she went back to it.

"Once I wrote that my imaginary friends were more satisfactory than my real ones. My imaginary woman friend has always been so. But I thought I had found a real man who was nicer than any one I could have imagined.

"And I have. My imagined ideal man isn't handsome. Handsome men grow conceited, and are spoiled by women. He's homely, has reddish hair because red isn't popular, freckles to match, homely features and a very kindly expression. He is kindly—I've come to think that is the greatest virtue a man can have.

"Of course, this is a picture of M. I've let myself fall in love with M. I thought no one appreciated him, and that I deserved his liking because I did appreciate his fineness and goodness, I never have found a flaw in him.

"I cannot think that G. can appreciate him. She isn't like that. I don't know why she wants him. It seems unfair, when she has everything she can possibly want, when she could make any man fall in love with her—that she should want and take, the only thing in the world I ever desired, which was M.'s friendship.

"It's too late to change my 'imaginary man. He is like and always will be like, Morton. But I'll have to separate him from his real counterpart and make him into a dream again. It would be wrong to be in love with another woman's husband, but not wrong to be in love with an ideal in my mind."

She had covered several pages with writing, but she went steadily on.

"I wonder what I shall do now? No one else around here will ever like me, even if I should ever care for anyone else—as I'm sure I won't. I'll go on and on, like this, only growing older and getting lonelier—that's the tragedy. I can never fit into these surroundings, and I don't know where I do belong.

"The thing is, never to look ahead. The most I have ever looked forward is three weeks—that's when something was to happen in that time. Now I must never think forward. I'm afraid to, for I can see so well the queer, freakish old maid I shall become. I must only look forward from day to evening, never beyond that."

Steamsphi Service

To better describe the accommodation, first made popular by its "M" steamships, the Canadian Pacific has coined the phrase "monoclass cabin service." "Mono" long used to denote "single" or "one", as in the words monogram, monologue, monotype, monolith, monograph, and monorail, designates.

These monoclass cabin steamships carry but one class of cabin passengers, providing popular accommodation at moderate price, instead of first and second class.

Monoclass cabin steamships are essentially comfortable ships. The drawing room or lounge, the smoke rooms, and other "community" rooms, around which centres life aboard ship, are bright, attractive and spacious. Passengers have the full use of all the upper promenade decks. The staterooms are particularly comfortable, well furnished and well ventilated.

All Canadian Pacific, monoclass cabin steamships sail from Montreal. Within recent years, especially during the 1921 season, it has been evident that the fame of the St. Lawrence Route, and the popularity and efficiency of the Canadian Pacific service had become known not only throughout Canada but in the States as well, to such an extent that large parties of American tourfists and families came to Montreal in preference to using the American Atlantic ports. For instead of a passage between an American port and Europe, which was merely a vast expanse of ocean, during which interest in the progress of the ships is varied by amusements devised aboard ship or the occasional passing of a ship, it was found that the St. Lawrence Route offered many features of attraction, apart from the comfort, courtesy and service of the Canadian Pacific steamships. Perhaps the principal attraction is the charm of an inland voyage on the picturesque St. Lawrence River and Gulf which shortens the ocean trip by nearly three days. This alone insured its popularity with even experienced travellers.

The monoclass cabin service has the additional appeal to many persons who do not care to travel on steamships carrying three classes, owing to the dividing line on the decks, the difference in food and service, and the various other distinctions between the first and second class accommodation.

The monoclass cabin service is maintained by the Canadian Pacific between Montreal and Liverpool by the S. S. Montclam 16,400 tons; Montrose, 16,400; Montclare, 16,400 tons; Victorian, 10,600 tons. Between Montreal and Glasgow by the S. S. Metagama, 12,400 tons; Corsican, 11,400 tons; Tunisian, 10,600 tons; Scotian, 10,200 tons. Between Montreal and Southampton and Antwerp by the S. S. Minnedosa, 14,000 tons; the Melita, 14,000 tons; and the Scandinavian, 12,000 tons. There is also the direct service to Italy, by the S. S. Montreal, 9,500 tons.

Recently, upon his return to Canada on the S. S. Melita, Sir Andrew MacPhail declared that the service and general conduct of affairs aboard the Canadian Pacific liners between the Old Country and Canada attracted large numbers of people to these routes, rather than to the lines running between the Old Country and the United States ports. "The ease and facility attending entry into a Canadian port, in contrast to the 'red tape' and officialism surrounding entry into United States ports" said Sir Andrew," is an added reason for the preferment of the Canadian routes." Many Americans, he states, would in future both go and return across the Atlantic via Canadian Pacific liners.

MARY GARDEN HAS RESIGNED HER JOB

CHICAGO, April 26—Mary Garden not altogether unexpectedly tonight resigned as general director of the Chicago Grand Opera Company. Miss Garden slipped quietly in to Chicago 24 hours in advance of the other members of the Chicago Opera Association, held a mysterious conference or so behind closed doors, and then issued a statement saying that she had decided to lay down the managerial reins, also that she was all artist and her place was with the other artists.

This action which has been whispered here for a week past puts a finale upon myriads of rumors that have run riot ever since the Chicago Opera Association visited New York in January and February. It was freely alleged then that Miss Garden found the cares of managerial life too much for her health, and that between the quarrels arising among the artists over questions of her administration and the call of the concert field, in which she would be able to make a much larger in come at much less labor, a severe pressure was being put upon her to abandon the position.

After weeks of consideration she decided to resign, saying in her statement that her fighting blood urged her to remain, but other considerations called upon her to go. This does not mean that she has left the opera company as an artist. From another source of information it was learned that she would probably appear with the company twelve or fourteen times next year.
