Rev. A. H. Sykes Now Testifies

Prominent Minister of Gospel Thinks it His Duty to Give Out Facts.

It is seldom, indeed, that men of prominence, especially ministers of the gospel, willingly express their indebtedness publicly to a proprietary medicine. However, when a medicine obtains of that singular purity and efficiency that is shown by the uniform preparation, Tanlac, statements from our best citizens are to be considered thoroughly commensurate with the good that is actually being accomplished.

Rev. A. H. Sykes, pastor of the Watkins Park Presbyterian church, Nashville, Tenn., prominent not only as a minister of the gospel, but popular as a man and citizen, who has been true to his friends and every trust, said recently:

For the past ten months Mrs. Sykes has been in very delicate health, suffering from both stomach and kidney trouble, which gradually developed into a general nervous breakdown. At times her condition was alarming and I frequently sought medical advice, but nothing we could do for her seemed to bring any relief.

"In fact she suffered so long and so much that I feel it my duty to let everyone know what this medicine has done for her. For several months her condition was such that she had to remain in bed and as a last resort I decided to let her try Tanlac.

"I am a conservative man," continued Rev. Sykes, "and have always been skeptical regarding the use of proprietary medicines, but this case has certainly poved an exception. I am now firmly convinced that Tanlac is a medicine of great power and extraordinary merit. I do not think I have ever seen anything give such prompt results.

"Mrs. Sykes had only taken two-thirds of a bottle of this medicine when we began noticing a marked improvement in her condition. In less than a week from the time she began taking it she was able to sit up and today is able to assist with the household duties.

"Before she began taking Tanlac she had fearful pains in her side and suffered constantly with sour stomach and indigestion, and was intensely nervous. These distressing symptoms, I am thankful to say, have entirely disappeared, her appetite has returned and she seems to relish everything she eats. She also sleeps better and is gaining flesh and strength rapidly. I think it is only a question of a short time now until her health will be fully restored.

"Tanlac," concluded Rev. Sykes, "has certainly proven a remarkable remedy in her case and will do all you claim for it. I cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

Tanlac is sold in Charlottetown by Reddin Bos

SANDRA THE JEALOUS

By Jane Phelps

ROSE DOUBTS SANDRA'S LOVE FOR EVERETT

CHAPTER VIII.

I wish I could prescribe understandingly the emotions I felt in those weeks proceeding my wedding. One day I was all eagerness to try that new life that was to be mine, the next all fear, and unwillingness—I tried to think of Everett as all a lover should be, as my idea of what one should be (had been) before I met him. But I felt often depressed, gray and overcast like some of the days just passed. The sweet urge of spring was gone; that time when I felt the buoyancy of youth, and I sometimes felt the tears beneath my lids, as I thought of the leaves and buds having lived their short lives and fallen, and wished like mother that Everett had been content to wait until spring came again.

I never had liked the fall of the year. In a way it always saddened me. It seemed to me that when the wind sighted in the tree-tops, or when it whistled so mournfully through the shrubs, that it was moaning with regret because of the coming death of all about. But never had I given voice to this feeling, I feared no one would understand.

And much of the time I was so excited over my pretty clothes, my gifts, the linen shower the girls gave for me, that I had not time for sad thoughts, or to worry about the future.

Sometimes I wondered in a vague sort of way just why Everett Graham had asked me to marry him. How he had come to look at me at all in the light of a wife. But like others I had heard that "loves goes where it is sent" and his was probably sent to me. When I said so to Rose, she replied in a real sharp way:

"I wish it had been sent to some one else."

Rose couldn't be reconciled to me marrying Everett. Not that she disliked him, she said often:

"He is a charming man, Sandra. But you can't be happy just because a man has nice manners and knows how to wear his clothes. A girl has got to have something besides that. I am older than you are, Sandra, but I'd be frightened to death to marry a man unless I just felt I couldn't live another minute without him. You don't love Mr. Graham like that, do you?"

"No — I guess — I — could— live —without him." I said slowly trying to analyze my feelings as I answered. "But Rose I have read stories where people didn't care so terribly much, and then love came in a blinding flash—those are just the very words 'a blinding flash.' Perhaps that is the way it will come to me if I don't love Everett enough now."

"Blinding flash nothing. Maybe you do love him all you can, Sandra. Maybe you aren't the kind that cares very much about love." Rose was sentimental, yet of the two I was far more alive to all that was emotional than was she.

I made up my mind that just as soon as we were married I should ask Everett about a lot of things. I wouldn't dare before, of course. But he must first of all tell me all about his first wife, and tell me he loved me far better than ever he had loved her. That was the most important thing of all. Then he must tell me all about his women friends, those he had called upon since he had been a widower, and if he had been in love with any of them, and a dozen other things I wanted desperately to know. Then I would write Rose and tell her how mistaken she had been, and show her how foolish she was to think Everett was too old to make me happy.

My faith that all his answers would set me at ease shows the little knowledge of what the replies to such questions as I meant to ask might mean to me—if they were honestly answered.

There was one thing about me I was sure Everett liked, that was my name. He had told me often, and everything he sent me was marked simply "Sandra." No initials, or monograms. He had told me that an unusual name aways attracted him. Mine surely was unusual, so of course he was pleased with it.

Had I known that even the liking he had for unusual names was to be a distressing factor in my life. I should not have been so proud that mother had called me Sandra.

Tomorrow—Sandra's Wedding Eve.
