AUTUMN

'Tis Autumn once more and the brown leaves fall
When the wild winds set them free;
And the fields are dressed in somber gray
As all autumn fields should be—
Oh, a touch of sadness melts my heart
As I note these changes all,
And I think of life, how like these leaves
When the curtain of death shall fall;
For one with the weight of years must bow
Our heads 'neath the arch of time,
Till the Autumn comes and we drift away
Like the leaves from the mother vine.
—F. H. MacArthur.

Formal Bridge Frock Gains Fashion Favor

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.—The hit of the season seems to be the bridge frock, the skirt of which clears the ground by the wide margin of nine inches. In some of the most stunning examples the bodice is cut high in front and to the waistline at the back. Designed to wear over the frocks are some charming boleros, usually of the dress fabric, but sometimes more elaborate. You will find these little after-thoughts also in fur just for variety among the legions of capes in fur and other media. Persian lamb is top for such things and may indeed be so regarded for all manner of uses.

Several authorities are quoted as giving the costume suit with swagger coat as the suit type of the moment. These are not all as sport-like as they sound. Fabrics and colors transform these suits, as do the blouses with which they are worn. In this connection it may be well to mention that, considering the season, navy is much in evidence. Navy is spring's own color, but in the line-up for fall one finds it repeated often enough to deserve mention.

While any number of interesting colors have a sporting chance to win, the daytime favorite is black—all-black or black-with. Combinations promise to be best in straight, rather than two colors.

In hoping to convey a clear impression of the fashion situation one should warn against a too-literal acceptance of the elaborated themes. After all, one must remain sane even in a mad, mad world of fashion, which is to say that the simpler things are still the best choice.

You are bound to like the new neck treatments, bringing strings and ropes, even festoons of pearls, again into play. Between necks bedecked with such things and belts flashing a message of their own the fall season is not without its colorful accents, black though many of the dresses really are.

It is a year in which, not only you but everyone else, will look to your waist line. It's because of belts, which never have been more important—or more deservedly so. They are always calling attention to themselves—and maybe to a matching unit—sometimes the handbag, sometimes the hat.

Prison Thief Is Sought

(C. P. By Guardian's Special Wire) OSENING, N. Y., Sept. 30.—The suspicion that Sing Sing penitentiary might be harboring a thief within its walls deepened today with the departmental trial of keeper William Lambert, who was charged with disobedience and conduct unbecoming an officer in connection with the disappearance of 3,000 yards of prison sheeting.

The departmental court reserved decision on the civil complaint against Lambert, who pleaded innocence, and authorities are investigating further the mystery of the missing two miles of bedding material.

Eye-glass And All

Francis W. Rickett, English financial adventurer, poses for this picture, complete with eye-glass, on the Forthos after leaving Djibouti. He had almost upset the League of Nations apparatus by concluding a sub-surface exploitation agreement between Emperor Haile Selassie and a U.S. oil company. The agreement fell through after a conference between the U.S. state department and executives of the oil company.

Jealousy.
Actor (modestly): "As a matter of fact, I have received letters from ladies in almost every place in which I have appeared."
Rival: "Landladies, I presume."
