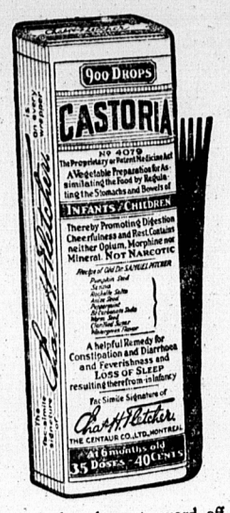
For TEETHING troubles



FUSSY, fretful . . . . of course babies are uncomfortable at teething time! And mothers are worried because of the little upsets which come so suddenly then. But there's one sure way to comfort a restless, teething child. Castoria — made especially for babies and children! It's perfectly harmless, as the formula on the wrapper tells you. It's mild in taste and action. Yet it rights little upsets with a never-failing effectiveness.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given to tiny infants—as often as there is need. In cases of colic and similar disturbances, it is invaluable. But it has every-day uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever older children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset, a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

Why is it Worth While for Parents to Live up to Their Children's Ideals — Shall Poor People Make Sacrifices to Educate Their Children — Greedy Son

Dear Miss Dix—Our children resent their father's careless manners, his neglect of his person and his ignoring of all table etiquette. He is very much hurt and thinks that they have ceased to love him, which I know isn't true. It is because they are fond of him and want to be proud of him. His parents say that he did just the same way when he was their age, and when he would come home from college he would criticize them so much they were miserable in his presence. Is there anything I can do to help the situation? WORRIED MOTHER.

Answer:

Why don't you get your mother-in-law to talk to your husband and remind him of how punctilious he used to be about all matters of good form in his youthful days and how he used to try to make the family over according to the collegiate standards?

That might make him take his children's strictures less to heart and cause him to realize that it is not lack of affection that makes them criticize him but just the arrogance of youth that is so certain that it knows it all and has a mission to reform the world, beginning with parents.

Apparently, however, from your account of the situation, your husband needs jacking up. Middle age is no alibi for a man getting sloppy and slovenly about his person. On the contrary, because a man is no longer young and slim is the very reason that he should be more careful of his clothes and his grooming. Increasing age and avoirdupois do not make us easier on our fellow creature's eyes, and it is just common humanity to do all that we can to make ourselves as pleasing a spectacle as we can in a world that is not overfull of beauty.

And certainly there is never any excuse at any time, at any age or under any circumstances for a man to ignore the niceties of table etiquette and feed like a pig at a trough. That is disgusting and repulsive and destroys the appetite of those who are unfortunate enough to have to hear him at three times a day and observe the sword-swallowing he does with his knife and spoon. Consideration for the feelings of others should make us dine instead of feed.

Of course, it is part of a wife's duty to keep her husband from slumping and relapsing into savagery, but this is not always easy to do. For men do not relish having their wives tell them of their faults or correct their table manners, and often for the sake of peace a wife learns to hold her peace even when her husband needs a shave and a haircut and to be run through the laundry. But children have no such inhibition. Father can't divorce them, and so they become most proficient and persistent little critics on the hearth.

And they are grand little reformers, too, I'll tell the world, for while a man and woman may be indifferent to each other's opinions and callous to the censure of the world, the one thing that they can't stand is the disapprobation of their children. Their vanity demands that they be oracles to their children, that their children look up to them and admire them and when they find out that instead of being examples that their children aspire to imitate their children regard them as awful warnings of what to avoid, it cuts them to the quick.

Now children all do want to look up to their parents, they want to be proud of them. Listen to little toddlers talk and you can hear them boast: "My mother is the prettiest woman in the world." "My father is the strongest man that ever was," but when they get older the parents have to justify their children's admiration for them. They have to make good. They have to give their children something to brag about. For at a very early age children begin seeing their father and mother as they are, without any subterfuge, and they are cruelly clear in their judgments.

A child isn't going to be proud of an untidy mother who doesn't look so nice as other children's mothers nor, as it grows up, is it going to be proud of a dull, stupid mother who never reads or keeps up with things. Nor it is going to be proud of a sloppy father who sits around home in his stocking feet and without a collar on and who ignores all the niceties and amenities of life. So it seems to me that it is worth while for parents to make some sacrifices to win the admiration of their children and live up to their children's ideal.

Dear Miss Dix—We have four children, one boy and three girls. Their father and I are very anxious to give them the best education that we can. Two of the girls will graduate from high school this year, one is anxious to go on to a teachers' training college. All of this is very difficult for us to do, as we are poor, and it requires a great sacrifice in many ways. Their aunts, who are childless, consider us very foolish in making this sacrifice and tell us that we should put them to work and that we had to do without an education and they can, too. Are the aunts right or are we? MRS. X.

Answer:

You are right to give your children every advantage of education that you possibly can, because it will not only enrich their whole lives, but it will enable them to make more money.

The girl and boy without education must do menial work, which is always poorly paid work, but if they are intelligent and well educated they can get jobs that pay a fair salary to begin with and the sky is their limit. They can go just as far as their intelligence will take them.

The first question that any employer asks an applicant for a position is what education he or she has, and if they have not even a high school education they have small chance of getting a desirable situation.

Don't listen to what the aunts say about the folly of sending your children to school. To give them an education is better than giving them a fortune, because they could lose the fortune, but the education they will always have and it will always be a tool to work with. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—I am a woman nearly 70 years old and have brought up a large family of children. I owned, through my own and my husband's labor and thrift, a house which we bought before our children were able to work. My husband died, but I managed to cling to the house with the aid of all the boys except the oldest, who married when he was in his early 20s and who, of course, had to support his own family.

Now I have sold the house at a good profit, and the oldest son, who has never helped me in any way financially, demands part of the money, saying it his right. The other children refuse to take a cent, telling me to keep all I have for my old age. What shall I do about giving the oldest son the money he demands? He is after me all the time about it, and it will make the other children so angry when they find out about it if I do give him the money. Please help.

AN OLD-FASHIONED TROUBLED MOTHER.

Answer:

Stiffen your backbone, Troubled Mother, and say "No" good and hard to your greedy, selfish son. Tell him that he will have to wait until you are dead before he gets his clutching fingers on your little bank roll. Of all your children he has the least claim upon you, and you will be unfair to them as well as to yourself if you give him the money out of which he is trying to wheedle you.

3020

A circular flounce lengthens this simple one-piece dress of smart sophistication.

It's a plaided rayon crepe in delightful rather vivid blue tones. The cutest idea about it is the subtle indication of the normal waistline, achieved through shirring at each side seam.

The deep scalloped collar in plain crepe in the highest tone of the print, is accented by bows of the deepest tone.

It's a favorite in Paris with the growing girl of 8, 10, 12 and 14 years whose clothes resemble the elder mode both in line and in fabric.

Style No. 3020 takes but 2⅛ yards of 35-inch material with ⅜ yard of 35-inch contrasting, for the miss of 8 years.

Other lovely idea for this practical model are linens, printed and plain tub silks, pique, ginghams, shantung and novelty cottons.

You will see one attractive style after another as you turn over the pages of our new Spring Fashion Book.

Styles for children or the miss, the matron, the stout—and a series of dressmaking articles. It is a book that will save you money.

Be sure to fill in the size of the pattern. Send stamps or coin (coin preferred.)

Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. What should a person do if he has taken into his mouth with the food some foreign substance that he wishes to remove?

A. It should be taken out behind the corner of the napkin, without attracting attention.

Q. How long should one stay at a large afternoon reception?

A. At least a half hour.

Q. Are long engagements fashionable?

A. No.

"What! Your're going to marry Mr. Soandso. But don't you know he has done five years in prison?"

"The scoundrel! He told me three."

Pimples and Blackheads Nearly Four Years. Cuticura Healed.

"My trouble began with blackheads and pimples appearing on my face. The pimples were hard, red and fairly large, and when I squeezed them they festered and scaled over. I scratched them and this caused eruptions and also disfigured my face. The trouble lasted nearly four years.

"I read different advertisements for Cuticura Soap and Ointment so purchased some. I got relief at once, and after using two cakes of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment I was completely healed." (Signed) Miss Elsie Bertrand, 303 Maitland St., Peterboro, Ont.

Surely the angels must weep at the spectacle of a son, a husky grown man, who is trying to graft from his poor old mother the money that her one piece of property brought her, who is willing to rob her of the few dollars that she has depended upon to make her last days comfortable and independent and who torments her tender mother heart with his importunities.

Human nature can show nothing baser than that. Robbing one's mother is the most despicable of all crimes, yet it is one committed. Grasping children take their mother's all, promising her to take care of her and cherish her as long as she lives. They are very affectionate and solicitous for her happiness until they get her money and then she finds herself thrust aside, made to feel a burden, often actually turned out of the house she has given them.

Any mother may be very sure of this—that if her children want her money it is not safe to give it to them. For if they loved her they would not be willing to take it. They would want her to spend it on herself, not on them. They would want her to have the blessed assurance of independence. They would want her to be able to indulge herself in the little luxuries she denied herself while she was struggling to rear them.

So the mother whose children are urging her to give them her property does well to get a death grip on her pocketbook. As long as she has money they will treat her well. The minute she has none they will send her to the poorhouse.

Just bear this in mind, Troubled Mother. Refuse to be held up by your avaricious son. He is trying to take advantage of you and of his worthier sisters and brothers. Be just to yourself and to them by refusing to give him the money for which he hounds you. DOROTHY DIX.

UNITED STATES WILL BUY RUSSIAN ROYAL LIBRARY

WASHINGTON, March 31.—The Library of Congress has announced it will purchase part of the library which was once the property of the former royal family of Russia.

No mention was made of the price involved. The books will be obtained from Israel Peristein, of New York, who acquired the Russian collection a few months ago from a State concern dealing in books in Soviet Russia.

The collection is said to embrace about 1,700 volumes. It includes books that belonged to Alexander II, Alexander III, Nicholas II, the Count Alexis, and the Empress Marie Feodorovna, wife of Alexander III.

The collection formerly was in the Winter Palace at Leningrad. The purchase includes numerous secret documents embraced in more than 50 volumes which had belonged to the general staff of Russia and related to military preparedness of various countries adjacent to Russia.

The books are printed in Russian French, German, English and other languages.

For The Cook

BUTTERSCOTCH PIE

One cup scalded milk, ¼ cup cornstarch, 1 cup light brown sugar, ½ cup cold milk, pinch salt, 2 tablespoons butter, 2 egg-yolks, 1 small teaspoon vanilla. Heat the sugar and hot milk together until the sugar is dissolved. Make a paste of the cold milk and cornstarch, and stir this slowly into the hot milk mixture. Cook and stir until well thickened. Put over hot water and cook 15 minutes longer. Remove from fire and add egg yolks, butter and flavoring. When cool use as a filling for a baked crust. Cover with meringue and brown in a slow oven.
