New glass shelving has been placed behind the rear counter, flanked by expensive mirrors and in a framework finished in handsome natural oak and with a base of curved glass, the whole being transformed into one massive show case or silent salesman. The effect produced is most attractive and the whole appearance of the store has been enhanced by retinting and repainting, the trimmings being done in white and gold. A magnificent new British bevelled plate glass mirror at the right reflects the beauty of the appointments of the modern drug emporium and other changes in lighting and shelving rearrangement has greatly improved the already splendid interior.

SHEEP INTERFERE.

VIENNA, May 29—There was an amusing scene during a recent performance of Siegfried Wagner's new opera, "Banana Dierich." The second act is a pastoral scene, during which, at the special request of the composer, a real flock of sheep was brought on the stage. As soon as the sheep were driven on the stage they began to feed on the artificial paper grass. Their disappointment was very great, and they upset the entire performance by their indignant bleating.

Frau Hilgerman, the star, tried vainly to sing her song, but found it impossible owing to the sheep. Finally she told the conductor, "Either I sing or the sheep." Thereupon the bandmen and the supers succeeded in shooting the flock off the stage, but not until after there had been an amusing scene, during which one of the rams vigorously butted the stage hands. Wagner is now compelled to resort to an imaginary flock of sheep, whose bleating is heard off the stage.
