was held. The following were the pall-bearers:—Messrs. Ewen McFadyen, Dougald McFadyen, Angus Cameron, Albert McDougall, Angus McDougall and William Shaw.

TOO BAD.—An individual who has been annoying certain citizens by peeping through windows came near paying the extreme penalty last night. Sticking his nose up against the window of a room in which a young lady was sitting he was at once seen as he had been expected, the offence being a repetition of many previous ones. The young lady fired at him with a revolver. Unfortunately she missed him. The attack, however, scared him and he made off. The young lady pluckily followed him but, again unfortunately, lost him. Should he persist in these unmanly and unwelcome attentions it is not at all improbable that he will run up against something harder than a pane of glass.

REV. MR. YOUNG APPRECIATED.—During the months of April and May the pupils of the Tryon Consolidated School were much aided in their nature study work by a series of lectures on Bird Study, delivered by the Rev. G. M. Young, of Tryon. The reverend gentleman is an authority on birds and it was with marked results that the pupils listened weekly to his instructive talks. As a completion to the work, Mr. Young summarized his work gone over in an able address in the Tryon Hall. The illustrated pictures shown on the screen greatly increased the value of the lecture. A large number of the rate-payers were present and showed their interest by contributing to a snug sum to be used by the school for the purpose of bird literature. A written examination was afterward given and a prize offered to the pupil making the highest marks in each class. The result was: Senior class, Harrison Bell; Intermediate, Jean Halliwell; Junior, Margaret Howatt. The Principal, Mr. Fred Bell, the pupils, and parents are greatly indebted to Mr. Young for the interest he has shown in the development of this important branch of school work.

THE PRINCE EDWARD

One of the best bills yet presented at the Prince Edward theatre was put on yesterday when the usual bumper houses were presented.

The leading number was the first instalment of the "Terrence O'Rourke" stories, a two-part play, "His Heart, His Hand, His Sword." This series is written by Louis Joseph Vance, author of "Trey O'Hearts," and produced under the direction of Jacques Jacard, with the handsome J. Warren Kerrigan in the title role and a number of the greatest Universal artists associated with him. Although there are a number of these releases, patrons by no means lose any of the enjoyment by not seeing them all, as each story is complete in itself. A young heart yearning for adventure, it comes with it a romance—woven with all the vividness and telling of its famous author. All should see this initial play and enjoy it. It is a gem of a short story, with a grip afforded only the powerful play. The photographic effects are beautiful, in fact the whole production is par excellence. Another special feature was "The Plot," written by Wm. Courtney, and Robert Gaillard. The play contains an extraordinary plot, which thrills and keeps the audience in suspense right to the finish. Action is the keynote, and love at last foils the villains. The characters are all well portrayed and the photography is up to the usual high standard of the Vitagraph Co. It was a splendid picture, in which Maurice plays the lead admirably.

Two rip-roaring comedies and a "Hearst-Selig Weekly," with particularly good war views, were the other numbers of the pictorial programme. Mr. Edwards made a great hit with the song, "I'm on My Way to Dublin Bay."

WHAT'S THE USE?

A darky running a ferry across the Alabama river was accosted by a poor white stranger who wanted to cross, but hadn't the wherewithal. Pete scratched his woolly poll, perplexedly, then queried: "Doan yo' got no money at all?" "No," was the dejected reply. "But 't doan' cost you' but three cents ter cross," insisted Pete. "I know, but I hain't got three cents." After a final inward think, Pete remarked: "I done tell yo' what; a man what's not got three cents am' jes as well off on dis side ob de ribber as on de odder!" —Exchange.
