Whitehall Notebook

LONDON, Jan. 16. - (C.P.) - Stanley Knowles, C.O. member of the Canadian parliament for Winnipeg, North Centre, who chatted with Prime Minister Attlee while in London for preparatory meetings for the United Nations General Assembly, said he found the British leader a confirmed internationalist.

"Even if we could carry on in Britain without full participation in all international organizations, both political and economic, it would not be good for the world," Mr. Knowles quoted him as saying.

Gordon Graydon, deputy opposition leader in the Commons at Ottawa, said alongside Mr. Knowles in staid observation of the proceedings in the British Commons.

"Here they're faster on their feet in the question period," both commented.

Home, please: members of parliament return to Westminster on Jan. 22 with the anxious hope that something will be done about the housing problem when the House sits late. So far, their Minister of Transport, Alfred Barnes, has taken the attitude that members of parliament must take the same chances as any other person who works late.

Cigarette money: the tale is told in Whitehall of a man who invested a legacy of £3,000 ($13,500) at three per cent and beamed when someone said the returns would keep him in cigars.

LONDON LETTER

BY JOHN DAUPHINEE Canadian Press Staff Writer

LONDON, Jan. 2 - (C.P.) - No matter how kind the climate may be, this is a gloomy winter for Britons.

The war has been over several months. Talk to the people in the pubs or on the buses about the blitz days or the buzz-bombs of summer, 1944, and they seem scarcely able to remember how they felt when the Germans threw everything they had against this island.

Britain had patience created by public acceptance of vital need through the years of slow buildup from Dunkirk to Berlin and Tokyo. But the man-in-the-street seems not yet to realize that the first reconquest years will be just as tough and his patience has sagged.

Some of the complaints are political, aimed at the new Labor Government. Some are from chronic groaners who would find things to criticize in the best of times. Most, however, are from ordinary folk who, through the war, made "peace" and "good living" synonymous.

They have found instead that material shortages have increased since VE day, although there are a few signs of improvement. Londoners are suffering most.

Since the termination of lend lease and the diversion of food to the starving, the papers have been full of stories about impending food shortages. Even the promise of some minor increases in rations has not been a sufficient balance. There still are queues for food, theatres, buses, trains, clearances.

Redistribution of the population as a result of demobilization of war factories and the return of evacuees to the big cities has increased distribution machinery work less smoothly than it did during the war. It will inevitably be some time before the power shortages are ended and new shops and pubs opened.

If food, clothing, transportation and entertainment are difficult, housing is a worse headache. Before the war 300,000 homes were destroyed; for six years there has been practically no construction and some 4,000,000 houses were destroyed or damaged by the enemy.

It is a gloomy winter in Britain a winter of complaints - but people say it will be better when spring comes.

Exercise - Star Beams. Solo - Bell Bottom Trousers by Wayne Proude. Recitation by John MacKinnon. Dialogue - Three O'Clock in The Morning. Recitation by Doris Proude. Duet by Betty and Sylvia Proude. Recitation by Betty Proude. Dialogue - Getting ready for a visit. Recitation by Evelyn MacKinnon. Solo - Mother's Prayer by Betty Proude. Dialogue - Mother and Dad have the same. Monologue by Kenneth Coles. Intermission. Exercise - Trimming the Tree. Recitation by Leighton Proude. Dialogue - Selling of Sally. Highland Fling danced by Elaine MacKinnon. Chorus - Santa's Bells by the school. Recitation - Good Night by Everett Johnston. Acoustic Good Night by a pupil.

After the program Santa Claus arrived in his usual jovial manner and distributed gifts to the pupils and teacher from a well laden tree.

Instrumental music for the evening was furnished by Francis Doyle and Charlie MacKinnon and was very much enjoyed.

The singing of the National Anthem brought the program to a close. - Patriot please, copy.
