"And whence the merry Ha had chucked-headed Teddie? What's the priceless joke?" "He-he! You must forgive me, Miss Prudence, if I tell 'em" Teddie wiped his eyes. "Jinny, this is Miss Prudence Page, and she—she took you for a horse! Ho! Ho!" "Did she, indeed?" Virginia's smile was insolence personified. She favored Prudence with the look one might give a beetle or some crawling insect when one hesitates whether or no to stamp on it. "But I suppose Miss Page isn't accustomed to thoroughbreds—and hence the error. Was that it?" Prudence wished that the ground might open to swallow her up. Her embarrassment was in no way lessened when one of the men was heard to titter, in a stage aside:—"Prudence has been imprudent, and had better turn a new Page!" Hatred, hateful people. Why had she come to be made the butt of their buffoonery? Her cheeks burned with a bitter shame, and her tongue was quick incapable of either repartee or explanation. "Tea, madam?" A waiter touched her elbow. "China or Ceylon?" "Yes. Yes. Any kind." Grateful for the diversion, she turned her back on the grinning group, and moved over to the long table that ran down one side of the marquee. "Milk, please. No lemon. Thanks." Her hands shook so that some of the liquid spilled into the saucer. A mist of anger and agonized embarrassment rose before her eyes, so that the whole scene became a blur. Oh! to get out of this hateful tent, to fly from these smart snobs with their edged tongues and jeering laughter, and seek peace and refuge in the apple-orchard. That quiet haven never failed her. And then a man's voice, soothing as balm on wounds, sweet and beguiling as a melody once known and loved, quick with a pleased surprise, sounded beside her:—"If it isn't my little princess of the apple-orchard! Well, I'm lucky!" The cup was taken from her shaking fingers, and both hands were clasped in two strong ones. Yes, it was he, her hero. . . . blond Prince Charming of the highways. . . . come to rescue at the eleventh hour a damsel in distress! Tomorrow's Instalment Deals with a Passionate Avowal of Love.

Claims Wheat Carryover Needed

REGINA, Sask., Aug. 2.—(C.P.)—Canada's large wheat carryover is part of the wheat reserve essential for world markets, H. L. Griffin of the United Grain Growers Limited, Winnipeg, today told delegates to the World's Grain Conference. The time had come, he asserted, to forget the causes and cost of this carryover and recognize it for what it has become. The world market, Mr. Griffin contended, can and does tolerate substantial reserves. Hunger and the fear of hunger were too recent experiences to the greater part of mankind and too widespread even now to make world markets anything but uneasy without there being constantly ahead a supply of food sufficient for many months. Consequently Mr. Griffin argued, western elevator system carrying a large part of the world's wheat reserves are performing a function of world economic importance.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—During the visit of the King and Queen to South Africa House, Her Majesty was presented with a round diamond of the finest quality. It weighs 10.23 carats. The gift was from the diamond industry of South Africa as a whole, and the Queen was pleased to accept it following a submission by the Government of the Union. The actual presentation was made by Sir Frank Meyer, deputy chairman of De Beers Consolidated Mines Ltd., in the room of the High Commissioner, Charles T. Water. A point of special interest is that the stone besides being a product of South Africa, was also cut and polished there. Cutting is a comparatively recent development of the industry in the Union; and the gift to the Queen, cut and polished as it was in one of the newest and most up-to-date diamond factories in Kimberly is representative of the highest class of workmanship that has been attained in South Africa.

IN MEMORIAM

JOHN SHERRY

We sail the sea of life, A calm one finds and one a tempest And the voyage is o'er, Death is the quiet haven of us all.

Again the silent messenger has visited Fernwood and removed an outstanding figure from the community in the person of Mr. John Sherry at the age of seventy years. Deceased had not been well for a year previous to his death having spent some time in Prince County Hospital. Later he went to Montreal for treatment where he had a leg amputated and for some months he felt that he was permanently cured. About three months before his death he was confined to bed and on Thursday, May 26th in the presence of his family, he passed peacefully from this world of toil and misery to his future home of peace and happiness.

From the time he realized that he was not going to get well again, he complained not, but accepted his sufferings and crosses as coming from the hand of his Creator.

Mr. Sherry was a life long resident of the community in which he died, was a very successful farmer, a man of sound judgment and good moral principles.

During the months of his illness he was comforted by his kind and devoted pastor, Rev. Father Monaghan of Seven Mile Bay.

He leaves to mourn his widow, Lucy Ann Noonan; four sons, Edwin, William, Louis and John Leroy; and four daughters Mrs. Thomas Ranahan, Mrs. Damien Shreenan, Mrs. Aloysius Roberts and Miss Perry; also a brother Mr. James Sherry and two sisters Mrs. Damien Bourgeois and Mrs. Daymor Kilbride.

On Saturday, May 27th, the funeral left his late residence and solemnly wended its way to the Roman Catholic Cemetery at Kinkora, where the remains of him, who had been a devoted husband and model father were peacefully laid to rest.

The pall bearers were his four sons—R. I. P.

TRAGIC FATE OF FAMILY OF MURDER VICTIM

(Canadian Press)

TORONTO, August 1.—Fred Williams of the Mail and Empire, delving into ancient records following the murder of Frank Emeneau, manager of the Bank of Montreal at Mexico City, has discovered a tragic shadow over the Emeneau family, pioneers of Lunenburg, N. S.

"Originally from Lunenburg, N. S., Mr. Emeneau (the name was originally Emeneud) found death by violence in a manner quite fitting to the family history," writes Williams. "His father, the manager of the Marine Railway at Lunenburg, was killed by an automobile accident a couple of years ago; his father in turn was drowned at sea; the fathers of the next preceding generations, I am told, also met death out of their beds; and the founder of the family was the victim of the first murder in the Province of Nova Scotia.

"The story of that early tragedy is as thrilling as any ever imagined by a detective mystery story writer or of a movie scenario junta. It is told in detail by Judge Mathew Byles DesBrisay in his 'History of the County of Lunenburg,' published by William Briggs at Toronto in 1895.

"In the Winter of 1791 one of those terrible tragedies which suddenly strike communities occurred at Lunenburg. George F. Emeneud, aged 70 years, who had brought up a family respectably and secured for himself and his partner a competency on their declining years, lived on the first peninsula not far from the town.

"Two men, George Frederick Boutellier and John Boutellier, one of them being godson to Mr. Emeneud, went on a visit to him intending to rob him of his money. Like many others, who checked by conscience cannot bring themselves to the actual commission of crime, they left him and subsequently returned to his house where they had always been most kindly treated and were invited to remain for the night. Mr. Emeneud went to the barn for some straw with which to make them a bed and when near the house on his return was brutally murdered by the elder Boutellier with a hatchet or axe.

The two Boutelliers then re-entered the house and killed Mrs. Emeneud in the same manner. The only other inmate was a granddaughter of Mr. Emeneud, who, trying to escape, was half-way through the window when she was dragged back and also murdered.

"The Boutelliers carried the old man's body into the house, to which they set fire in order to burn up, as they vainly hoped, all traces of their guilty deed. They then reversed their snowshoes to make detection impossible; but 'murder will out' and blood being found on the premises aroused suspicion. The Boutelliers were pursued and captured in a hut near Bedford Basin. The death sentence was executed.

"The clue which convicted them and sent them to the scaffold was a small bit of chalk. Judge DesBrisay thus tells about it: 'A few hours before the murder Mr. Emeneud and his son, Frederick, who lived a short distance from him, were working together and divided between them a piece of red chalk. The murder, transferred to his pocket all that was on the person of Mr. Emeneud, the piece of chalk included, which when found fitted exactly with the piece in the possession of young Emeneud.'

His bank account was down to naught—a most disturbing figure. His future bride was told the news and knocked him back with vigor; for was she not a girl who from the early age of ten had heard her mother say: 'My child, beware of naughty men!'

Miss Bridget Johnston, Charlottetown; De Blois Brothers, Charlottetown.

Defender Of Kars Was Nova Scotian

Sir Fenwick Williams, Born In Annapolis, Returned From Crimea To Become Governor

HALIFAX, Aug. 2.—(C.P.)—Wednesday, July 26, marked the 50th death anniversary of a native Nova Scotian who rose to heroic heights in the military service of the empire, came back to this province as governor, and had a hand in the shaping of Confederation.

Despite his brilliant contribution to the public life of his time the name of Sir Fenwick Williams, comparatively, is little known. A tall portly stands in the old legislature council chamber in Province House, where legislature once voted 150 guineas to buy him a sword, but legendary fame like that of Howe and Halliburton never attached itself to Williams.

Yet this day—78 years ago the name of "Kars" was on everyone's lips. Out in the Crimea Great Britain and France were battling to circumvent Russia's pretensions to Turkish territory and control of the Mediterranean. And in the beleaguered town of Kars, in Asiatic Turkey, Williams was leading, exhorting, encouraging his handful of Turkish troops to the embarrasment of the Russian armies.

He went to Turkey, by way of Woolwich Royal Military Academy and rapid advancement, from the quiet town of Annapolis Royal, itself steeped in military tradition, but in Williams' time well removed from actual strife. He was born there in 1799, son of Thomas Williams, a colonel in the militia.

Woolwich, a commission in the artillery, a journey to Turkey for employment in Constantinople arsenal, position as British Commissioner in the Eseron treaty negotiations, prepared Williams for stern tasks later. In 1849 he was British Commissioner in the Turkish-Persian boundary settlement.

At the outset of the Turkish-Russian conflict Williams was appointed British Commissioner with the Turkish Army in Anatolia. He found absolute disorder there, but secured the native rank of Paasha and by dint of unceasing effort overcame apathy and introduced stringent methods of organization. Troops were drilled and earthworks thrown up against the enemy, successfully stemming their advance.

All this led up to the long siege of Kars, which finally fell, not through Russian success, but the scourge of disease. "You have made yourself a name in history, and posterity will stand amazed at the endurance, the courage and discipline which this siege has called forth in the remains of an army," declared the Russian Commander Mouravieff, as honors of war were granted the depleted garrison. That was in the early winter, and Williams and his men had held out from the first of June. Even as late as September 26 Mouravieff had been driven back from the gates with a loss of 6,000 men. But starvation and disease cutting down the force at the rate of 100 men a day, finally forced capitulation.

On his return to England General Williams was knighted and granted a pension; later a baronetcy was conferred upon him. "The sword voted to me by the Nova Scotians is the most acceptable to my heart," he wrote of these honors. "When I again come in sight of that land where I first drew my breath, I shall feel that I am a thousand times requited for all I have gone through."

General Williams had his wish. In 1865 he was appointed Lieutenant Governor, and was able to assist in negotiations leading to Confederation. At his death in 1883 he was constable of the Tower of London.
