PATRIOTISM AND PRODUCTION.—At the evening session of the Dairy Producers' Association on Monday night, Professor Theodore Ross read an interesting paper on "Patriotism and Production," in which he dealt at great length with the war and its causes and the part every British subject should play to the end of defeating the enemy. He first pointed out that the United Kingdom did not raise its own food supplies and must depend on other nations for them. In the past, vast quantities of her supplies came from the countries now at war, and she must now, therefore, procure them from her dominions overseas. It was Canada's duty to increase her production so that she could send to the Mother Country all that she needed to sustain her during the war. Great Britain wanted food supplies, and she was well able from her vast resources to pay for all she got.
