 MILDRED BARBOUR

CHAPTER 51
 THE TIGHTENING NET
 It is doubtful if Herbert would have overlooked Lila's outrageous behavior that night, or accepted Dorothy's vague reference to a practical joke, had not he assured himself over the phone that she was actually in Dorothy's studio. Even then he was suspicious; she might not have been alone in the studio.

She returned home, penitent and loving, a little apprehensive, until she learned that Gilroy Holmes was no longer in the house.

Herbert read her a lecture on her frivolous ways and ended with a warning about Dorothy Caine.

"I repeat, Lila, that this girl is not a safe friend for you. She is entirely too careless and irresponsible. Nearly all of our—er—disagreements have arisen from some incident in which Dorothy played the leading part."

Perched on the arm of his chair her lips against his cheek, Lila was adorably docile.

"Dot doesn't mean any harm, darling. She and I—well, we play silly games; we've always had heaps of fun together. And sometimes we forget that I'm married and have responsibilities. I'll try to behave in a much more dignified fashion in the future."

Herbert let the matter rest, at that, but, in his heart, he was not at all satisfied. He told himself that Lila and Dorothy Caine were up to something, and he didn't intend to let them pull the wool over his eyes.

Lila, growing more sensitive every day to other people's moods, because it was desperately necessary, realized that suspicion regarding her actions was firmly implanted in Herbert's mind. She strove to be more than ever sweet and charming and docile. She agreed with him in everything, fell in with all his plans, and gave him all her time, with the exception of the hour each day when she had to see Jack Farquhar, or arouse that exacting young man's ire.

Farquhar was growing more and more restive. His demands that she publicly announce their engagement became alarmingly insistent. He no longer seemed content to have tea with her at the home of "Mrs. Herbert Ware."

One afternoon he demanded abruptly: "Why doesn't Mrs. Ware ever show herself? Now that I've met her, there seems no reason for her absenting herself so pointedly."

"Oh, she's very busy," declared Lila hastily. "Why do you want to see her?" she asked teasingly. "Did you find her so attractive?"

"I saw your uncle yesterday," he remarked, ignoring the question. Lila started violently.

"Uncle Dan? But he—" she caught herself up sharply and bit her lip. Surely Uncle Dan had gone west!

"You didn't tell me his name," said Farquhar dryly. "I mean the man we saw that day at the Ritz."

Lila paled.

Farquhar, of course, referred to the occasion when she had run across her father.

"Where did you see him?" she asked apprehensively.

"Coming out of your father's house. It would seem that he visits there several times each day."

The significance of that revelation came home to Lila. She gasped: "Jack, you've been spying again!"

He shrugged.

"If you like to call it that. Though, personally, I fail to see why I may not stroll in the neighborhood of your home, without being accused of espionage."

"I won't have it, Jack!" declared Lila hotly. "—you'll get me into serious trouble, if you persist in such nonsense."

"And I'm telling the truth—for once!" she thought grimly.

"I'm not sure that I wouldn't prefer that," answered Farquhar deliberately. "Then you'd have to take steps to free yourself from that other engagement, instead of stringing me along, as you're doing."

"If you've so little consideration for me and are so dissatisfied with things as they are, why don't you break our engagement?" asked Lila hopefully. This was the second time, since his return, that she had made such a suggestion.

He smiled ironically, and replied, as he had before:

"Not by a long shot, my dear. I consider you more than merely engaged to me. I hold that pledge almost as sacred as a marriage vow. And I'm not the sort who goes back on his word. I'll never give you up, and, if you try to make me do so, I'll go to your father with the whole story. And before then, I'll send an announcement to the newspapers. I'm not going to let you make a fool of me, Lila."

She was aghast at the threat, but she managed to say petulantly: "I don't believe you love me a bit, Jack. I think it's only that you want your way. You can't bear to be a loser."

"You bet your life I can't—and won't!" he answered warmly.

Lila sighed resignedly. She wondered how long this farce—or tragedy—whichever it was to be—would go on. Could she endure much more? The suspense, the constant need for readiness, for evasion, for downright falsehood, was telling on her frightfully.

It was that same afternoon, after Siddons had ushered Farquhar to the door, that he returned to Lila. "I trust that Madam has not forgotten that little matter of an increase in my salary," he suggested respectfully.

"I'll speak to Mr. Ware tonight," said Lila wearily.

She had little hope regarding the outcome, and her premonition was justified. Herbert declared flatly: "A raise? Ridiculous. The fellow is vastly overpaid as it is. Not another cent from me, and if he doesn't like it, tell him he can get out."

That was the last thing Lila dared tell Siddons. She must get the money somehow.

SMOOTHER
 with New Refinements...and enhanced in Style and Beauty

DURING its thirty months before the public, the Pontiac Six has earned a world wide reputation for combining six-cylinder smoothness and high-speed endurance like no other car in its field. Now, because of recent engineering advancements, to-day's Pontiac Six offers even greater smoothness and more satisfying performance than ever before.

To Pontiac's thoroughly proved design—to its Lovejoy Shock Absorbers, its 186 cu. in. engine and generously over-sized vital units—to its numerous engineering advancements, such as the G.M.R. cylinder Head—Pontiac has added new Marvel carburetor, improved manifold and new distributor.

Now this lowest priced General Motors Six provides a combination of quality features never before offered in a car of comparable price. In addition, the outstanding beauty of Pontiac's "body by Fisher" has been enhanced by new, smaller wheels and larger tires.

Newly refined and improved—to-day's Pontiac Six is more clearly than ever the value leader of its field. Drive it—and discover this truth for yourself!
