

GILLETT'S PERFUMED LYE

CAUTION.

Put a strong glass on the label and examine it closely every time. Always look for the name "Gillett's."

Like all good articles, which are extensively advertised, Gillett's Lye is frequently and very closely imitated. In some instances the imitators have actually copied directions and other printed matter from our label word for word. Be wise, and refuse to purchase imitation articles for they are never satisfactory.

Insist On Getting Gillett's Lye

and decline to accept anything that looks to be an imitation or that is represented to be "just as good" or "better," or "the same thing." In our experience of over fifty years in business we have never known of an imitation article that has been a success, for imitators are not reliable people. At the best the "just as good" kinds are only trashy imitations, so decline them with thanks every time.

SYNOPSIS OF CANADIAN NORTHWEST HOMESTEAD REGULATIONS

Any even numbered section of Dominion Land in the Saskatchewan and Alberta, excepting 8 and 28, not reserved may be homesteaded by any person who is the sole head of the family, or any male over 18 years of age, to the extent of one-quarter section 160 acres, more or less.

Applications for entry must be made in person by the applicant at a Dominion Land Agency or Sub-agency for the district in which the land is situated. Entry by proxy may however be made at an Agency on certain conditions by the father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister of any intending homesteader.

The homesteader is required to perform the homestead duties under one of the following plans:

- (1) At least six months residence upon the cultivation of the land in each year for three years.
- (2) A homesteader may, if he so desires perform the required residence duties by living on farming land owned solely by him not less than eighty (80) acres in extent, in the vicinity of his homestead. Joint ownership in land will not meet this requirement.
- (3) If the father (or mother, if the father is deceased) of homesteader has permanent residence on farming land owned solely by him, not less than eighty (80) acres in extent in the vicinity of the homestead, or upon a homestead entered by him in the vicinity such homesteader may perform his own residence duties by living with the (father, or mother.)
- (4) The term "vicinity" in the two preceding paragraphs is defined as meaning not more than nine miles in a direct line, exclusive of the width of road allowances crossed in the measurement.
- (5) A homesteader intending to perform his residence duties in accordance with the above while living with parents or on farming land owned by himself must notify the Agent for the district of such intention. Six months' notice in writing should be given to the Commissioner of Dominion Lands at Ottawa, of intention to apply for patent.

GUARDIAN SHORT STORY

Henry and The "Bum B."

By Arthur Brindamour.
Copyrighted, 1907, by E. C. Parsons.

Howard Dighton stopped at the stenographer's desk, and Henry ground his teeth together savagely. He knew very well that he could never hope to marry Phoebe Childers, for she had made this quite clear when, under the first impulse of his boyish love, he had written her a fervid declaration of his intention to marry her when he should have grown up. Thereafter it was a hopeless passion that he nursed, but his grief was not assuaged at the spectacle of Dighton bending over his desk, for the lad shrewdly noticed that she did not draw away from the chief clerk as she did when the junior partner came to her desk, as he so often did.

There had been when Dighton was Henry's boyish hero. It was he who had trained the lad to office ways, and until they two became rivals for Miss Childers' love Dighton had been Henry's favorite. But with the coming of the pretty typewriter to the office all this had been changed.

As Dighton stepped away from the desk Henry slid up to Miss Childers' chair with a remark conjured up on the spur of the moment, just to show Dighton that he, too, could lean over Miss Childers' desk until the fair hair almost brushed his cheek. Then he went back to his desk, but not before Dighton had called him to his side and had sharply ordered him to stop wandering about the office.

"I'll get square with you," muttered Henry as he went slowly to his seat, and even Phoebe's bright smile as he again passed her desk did not ease the hurt to his pride. He stood well with Miss Childers, but it was within Dighton's province to "call him" before her, and the man had so absurd and unreasoning jealousy of the boy. Dighton had not yet gained the assurance to put his fate to the test, and the air of easy familiarity with which Henry copied his exact attitude was not to be borne by a somewhat fiery and love-tried trapper.

Henry was still meditating the particular form of torture to which he would like to see Dighton submitted when the two active partners, Evans and Sutton, came out of the private office. Kincaid, the silent partner, was with them, and their faces were grave and serious. The senior partner became spokesman.

"The Burton-Bradley company has obtained our bids on the naval job," he said without preliminary. "Can you explain, Miss Childers, how they come to be in possession of a typewritten copy of our bid?"

"I know nothing of it," said the girl evenly. "As soon as the proposal was made out I returned to Mr. Sutton the original, while the typewritten copy I laid on your desk to be signed."

Kincaid looked sharply at the junior partner. "That is correct, Mr. Sutton?" he asked.

"I think so," said Sutton uncertainly. "I remember Miss Childers giving me a rough draft of the bid and laying some papers on Mr. Evans' desk. I was just about to go to lunch, and after thrusting the draft in the safe I left. I did not look to see the copy on Mr. Evans' desk."

Kincaid frowned.

"It is unfortunate for you," he said, turning to the typewriter, "that Mr. Sutton did not examine the copy on the other desk. Some one in this office delivered to the other company a few thousand lower and got the contract. The man from whom I obtained my information could not tell me by whom the delivery was made, but the inference is obvious. You are the only stenographer employed in this office."

He waved the incriminating document toward her, and the current of air from the electric fan blew it out of his hand. Henry, who had been gradually edging closer to Miss Childers' desk, sprang to pick it up. He rose to his feet slowly, ignoring Kincaid's impatient gesture.

"This ain't Miss Childers' writing," he declared. "Even a kid could see that."

"You employ a detective upon your staff?" asked Kincaid of Evans, with a sarcastic smile. Henry flushed.

"I'm only a kid," he retorted, "but I got some. This was written on Mr. Sutton's machine."

Sutton flushed. He had been a clerk for Evans before an unexpected legacy had permitted him to buy into the firm. He still used the typewriter occasionally.

"Don't you see that bum B?" demanded Henry. "That's on Mr. Sutton's machine. The B key fell off about a month ago, and they sent a man over to fix it. He didn't know as much about the job as I do, and he left it crooked. Get Miss Childers to write something on her machine."

The girl grasped the idea and rapidly transcribed a few lines from the paper. Kincaid examined the two and nodded approvingly toward Henry.

"You've been reading dime novels and detective stories to some purpose," he said, "though I'm hanged if I ever saw that bum before. Let's see that machine of yours, Sutton."

He led the way into the private office, and Henry followed, unchallenged, though Dighton and Miss Childers remained outside. Sutton uncovered his machine and wrote a few lines. When he arose his face was drawn and white. "It looks bad for me," he said. "The boy was right about the broken key, and as I was in a hurry to use the machine I told him to come again when there was more time. This was a week before the bid was put in."

"You had a copy of the bid," said Kincaid meaningly. Sutton nodded.

"I still have the draft," he admitted, "but I did not make this copy, though it must have been made on my typewriter."

Kincaid's face grew dark.

"I am sorry about this," he said slowly. "I trusted you, though it has been apparent for some time that other firms were getting the best of us on big contracts. I think, Sutton, that the partnership had best be dissolved."

"I admit that appearances are against me," said the junior, "but I did not give out those or any other figures."

"Sure not," put in Henry. Kincaid frowned.

"How dared you follow us in here?" he thundered.

"Thought you wanted me," was the calm response. "Mr. Sutton didn't copy that stuff. It was a little man with a manny goat beard. He came in to see Mr. Evans while the quack was to lunch. There was only me and him here, and this fellow comes in, and he goes in the office and hangs the machine for fair. Then he goes out, and Mr. Evans chases me over to Graves & Sitgreaves with the money he got for margin. One of the kids over there says Mr. Evans can't play the market any better than he does the ponies."

Kincaid caught Henry by the collar and helped him hurriedly out of the office. Then he locked the door, and the three employees in the main office could hear only the hum of angry voices, though Henry had an explanation. Probably Kincaid knew what the boy had picked up through the freemasonry of office boys. Evans was betting on the market and on the races with no success. He had overdrawn his share of the profits of the firm, and in his pressing need of ready money he had sold information to his partners' undoing.

It must have been the right explanation, for later on Kincaid apologized to Miss Childers for his suspicious, and the three men left the office.

"Phoebe threw her arms about Henry's neck and planted half a dozen kisses upon the freckled cheek."

"You have saved my reputation and my happiness," she whispered to the blushing boy as she released him. "I shall never forget it."

Henry winked at Dighton.

"I guess that's something you can't do?" he exulted.

For answer Phoebe slipped an arm about Dighton's neck. "But he may," she laughed, "for we are to be married soon."

"Stung?" murmured Henry. "But all the same I'm glad I know about that bum B. I guess I'll wait and marry your daughter when she grows up."
