

"I SLEEP WITHOUT SMOTHERING"

"I was for two years totally unable to do my work with Asthma... I tried several treatments but got no relief. A friend advised me to try Overseas Asthma Remedy. I got a bottle and it has helped me so much I am now able to be about my work as I used to be. I can sleep all night without smothering and choking as I have been for two years. I have a good appetite."

"I am willing to answer letters asking about what it has done for me." Mrs. John J. McAdam, West St. Peters, R.R. Mt. Stewart, P.E.I.

The Third Warning

A Mystery Love Story

By Augustus Mau

"And what did he say?" I queried. "He was dreadfully angry. He asked me what right I had to interfere. He told me to keep my fingers out of the whole business."

"But surely you did for his sake," I said. "Not that it was necessary, as I've explained."

"I told him I didn't want to interfere. He demanded to hear all I knew about Brackenbridge Hall and you, and of course I told him I know nothing. And then the poor old dear kissed me as if I were a kid, and apologized for his bad temper. You never saw such a sentimental scene. I wept a bit, I'm afraid. But, oh he is strange these days. I wish I knew what to make of him. I don't believe he sleeps a wink at night, pacing his bedroom floor, up and down, up and down; it seems to go on for hours."

"He's got something on his mind," I said. "Have you any inkling what it is?"

Margot shook her head. "I wish I had!—though I don't suppose I could be of any help. And yet one never knows. If only he would share it with me, it might be a relief to him. I can't ask straight out—I daren't. Tell me," she said after a moment's thought, "whether I'm right in this. I'm going to ask you a question. You were going to explain to me this morning what had hinted to you about Mr. Drysdale's death, and I stopped you—I've no right to stand back when dad is somehow involved. Was this what he told you? Did he say that there was something queer about the old laird's death?" Margot spoke the words as if she hated them.

"He did, but he said there was no proof of it, and I didn't put much stress on it myself. He used it as an argument why I shouldn't come and stay at the hall."

"He did. Only as an argument?" "Oh he was upset about it all right, and said the old laird had been his best friend. But now you tell me this, Margot: Do you honestly think my safety is the only reason why he's keen I should clear out?"

Margot started. Her eyes opened, and she looked at me queerly. "Oh!" she said with a catch in her breath, and stopped. Then her eyes filled with tears which she brushed back, and I saw her biting her lip. "I wish to heaven I knew!" she said quietly.

"It's Seymour," I said with sudden bitterness. "You'll find it has something to do with that man Seymour. What is your father's attitude toward him?"

"Hush!" said Margot quickly. "They're waiting for us at the dock."

By this time we had reached the rising grounds and George and Seymour were sitting watching us, enjoying the midge-dispersing cologne of a cigarette. As we drew near, George jumped to his feet. "Come on," he said to Seymour. "We won't interrupt those two, they seem much too interested. I could see that George was anxious to continue their chat, and I gave them a good hundred yards' start before lifting our imbecile over the drystone dike, and mutely admiring the skill and grace with Margot navigated its rough contour."

It crossed my mind that I should mention the occasion when I had seen her at Seymour's window in the Edinburgh Hotel, but decided to keep that back for the moment. To speak of it might look as if I were demanding an explanation, when after all it was none of my business, and Margot might freeze up altogether. I knew it had been an effort for her to confide in me as much as she had done, and I admitted the racial reserve that had made her hold her tongue till she was quite certain I was a person she could trust. Even on the day I had told her I loved her, she had been reticent; and it was pleasant to me to think she had made me her confidant now.

We were on a steep cart track, and suddenly she slipped her hand through my arm and let it rest there. Her gesture was slyly and frank, performed without shyness or hesitation. But the subject of her father was dropped.

George and Seymour were waiting us on a grassy knoll beside the stream and the latter was arranging his slender easel to make a sketch of the hillside and glen as it widened out and sank into the rolling countryside beyond. George was propped up against a boulder, very comfortable, with his pipe alight. Margot and I dropped beside him on the grass, and I watched Seymour adjust his sketching paraphernalia. At last he was satisfied and turned to us with a smile. "And now, my children," he cried, "you may play till tea time."

"I said I was going to make the fire," said George, "and I'm jolly well going to make it."

"But you must let me gather the sticks," Margot interrupted.

"No such thing," bellowed George. "You mustn't decide for me!"

claimed Seymour. "She always gathers the sticks. You've no idea what a connoisseur she is at gathering sticks."

EXPLORING

George got to his feet. "Right-ho! If people will insist on doing my work for me, why should I refuse? Miss Shaw, you're not a girl; you're a labor-saving device! Now I'm going to fish down this stream all the time for me to return and strike the sacramental match."

"We'll cook your trout for tea," said Margot, with a smile.

"You're pretty safe," I told her. "I am going to fish up the burn but I make no rash promises."

"Ronny is a crack at catching trees," said George. "Don't bother to gather those sticks. Miss Shaw; he'll bring you back enough branches to make a bonfire."

"Off you go then!" laughed Margot; "and don't be a minute later than half past 4."

FIRST SAINTS OF THE NEW WORLD

Vatican City, April 11.—Eight martyrs of the Roman Catholic faith will be solemnly canonized in June and will thus become the first saints of the North American continent.

The new saints will be:—Jean de Brebeuf (1593-1644), who was tortured to death by the Iroquois Indians and whose head is still kept as a relic at the Hotel-Dieu in Quebec.

Gabriel Lalemant (1610-1648), tortured to death at the same time as the Blessed de Brebeuf.

Antony Daniel (1606-1648) and Charles Garnier (1606-1649), both attacks on Huron missions. Noel Chabanel (1613-1649) killed by a renegade Indian, Rene Goupil, killed after torture in New York state, Isaac Jogues and John Lalande, also murdered by Indians, while on missionary work.

The eight martyrs were solemnly beatified on June 25, 1925. Before the canonization can take place two clearly established miracles have to be proved to the full satisfaction of the Congregation of Rites.

Among the various miracles attributed to the martyrs, two have been chosen by the Congregation for the purpose of the canonization.

These miracles refer to the cures obtained at this religious house of Hyacinth in Quebec on November 30, 1927. On that occasion ten cures were effected through the virtue of the martyrs, the outstanding miracle being the cure of Sister Maria Massima, who completely recovered from a prolonged attack of peritonitis.

Another sister was also cured of the same complaint. Many French and Canadian pilgrims are expected to visit the Vatican City for the canonization ceremonies in June.

The only saint canonized in the South American continent was Saint Rosa of Lima, Peru.

LETTER OF SYMPATHY Dear Mrs. Crawford, Rustico:— We wish to convey to you our sincere sympathy in your recent sudden bereavement. Your mother was possessed of wonderful vitality, being active up to the time of her short illness, and when one reaches nearly the century mark retaining all their faculties as she did, we realize that they have been singularly blessed. We have had the privilege of meeting her during the last few years and know something of the splendid characteristics she possessed. In the district where she formerly lived she was thought of very highly and in order to secure that esteem she was the right type of womanhood. We know there are times when you will long for a touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still."

Wives - - - keep the TROUSSEAU HABIT!

ELINOR GLENN tells the women of CHARLOTTETOWN

HOW to hold a husband's love—keep romance in marriage—that is the problem put up to me constantly by innumerable wives.

Can it be done? Fortunately the answer is yes. How? By being always feminine—charmingly, colourfully, daintily feminine.

But first of all you yourself must feel your own daintiness, womanliness, before you can impress others.

One of the surest ways for a wife to gain perfect confidence in her dainty, lovely femininity is to wear charming lingerie and negligees.

Wonderful colours, soft, shimmering materials, lace-edged underthings! They just make a woman believe in herself—feel her inherent charm as a woman.

If a woman but keeps all this loveliness at its very best—as beautiful as when it came, new, from its tissue box, she is captain of her fate—irresistible.

Because she believes in herself she makes others believe in her. Confidence is contagious.

Keep Colours Charming

But, women tell me, it is so difficult to wear lovely underthings always and keep them looking as wonderful, as colourful, as when they were new. Frequent washing (and we must be dainty) takes some of the lovely colour and charm out of the garment.

To this I reply, that is too often the case, but it need, never be so if women faithfully use that invaluable product, LUX—which is made especially to cleanse without disturbing the vibrant loveliness of the colours. If a garment is safe in clear water alone, it is just as safe in LUX.

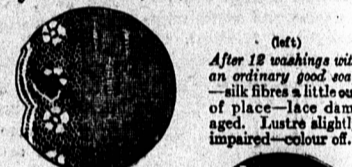

Some wives keep romance in marriage forever—isn't one secret the trousseau habit?

Your Home Reflects You

Not only should you express your femininity through the effect dainty underthings have on you—as well as directly through the magnetism of colour in your frocks and accessories (gloves, scarfs, handkerchiefs) but by your very surroundings. Even the curtains, draperies, slip covers in your living room form part of the magic spell that reflects you. And here, too, Lux is invaluable.

After 18 washings with an ordinary good soap—silk fibres a little out of place—lace damaged. Luxes slightly impaired—colour faded.

After 18 washings with every thread in place, silk and lace fibres intact, colour intact. The garment retains all the charm of new.

If it's safe in water, it's safe in LUX
