

BLAST WRECKS BUILDING

(Special to the Guardian) LOS ANGELES, Calif., July 4.—The alleged plot of a cashier to wreck the offices of the Los Angeles Grain Exchange in the hope of obliterating records of a shortage in his accounts, today caused a bomb explosion which partly destroyed the trading suites. The blast shattered partitions, knocked the plaster from ceilings and walls and damaged furniture. The offices were vacant at the time. The cashier who police said, admitted the plot, was Perry E. Parson, 47. Parson, police said, admitted a $1,000 shortage dating from January last. The suspect was charged with dynamiting a building and embezzlement.

The following reference from the Wausau, Wisconsin Daily Record will be of much interest to Sir Charles Dalton's home friends: "Sir Charles Dalton of Prince Edward Island, Canada, yesterday told the story of his pioneer work in establishing the Silver Black Fox breeding industry on Prince Edward Island just fifty years ago, and he described his initial trials and tribulations, in attempting to grow wild fur bearing animals in captivity, and incidentally of the huge success financially attending his enterprise.

"Sir Charles is very near eighty years of age, and while still active and intensely interested, was considerably exhausted as he completed reading his rather long paper which he did before an interested audience which filled the stock pavilion at the Marathon fair grounds. Later in the evening he was lauded and feted, by an enthusiastic crowd during the dinner served in the Hotel Wausau, as which time he was presented with a gold headed cane by the state fox breeders association.

"Sir Charles, who is of Irish lineage, told of his early boyhood on the little island off the eastern Canadian coast, and of his early love for trapping and hunting; of his trapping black foxes, and ultimately of his starting to rear foxes in sheds and cages on his father's place, until finally the business assumed tremendous proportions.

"Sir Charles sold his ranch some years ago, but it is continued under the name of the Misses Sullivan are expected in Ottawa for the marriage on Saturday of Miss Eileen Scott and Mr. Charles D. Mulvey. Others who will be here from Montreal for the wedding are Mr. and Mrs. Percy Flintoft and Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Curle.

The address included many stories of how he learned how to care for and feed foxes, of the various qualities of pelts, and of the best methods of handling, and his statement of sales mounted into many millions of dollars, some pelts having sold for two and three thousand dollars each.

"The dinner served in the Hotel Wausau dining rooms last evening was a brilliant social success, nearly four hundred men and ladies attending, and the tables were artistically decorated with flowers and streamers.

"Dr. L. J. O'Reilly, president of both the state and national fox breeders associations presided and announced the speakers, and the audience gave a rising salute in honor of the guest of honor, Sir Charles Dalton.

The three day summer school closed this afternoon at Marathon park, the program having been carried out in almost every detail, specialists from many states coming to give informative talks on the care and feeding of these valuable little animals."

Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada, entertained H.R.H. Prince Henry, Duke of Gloucester, at breakfast following his arrival in Ottawa Monday morning. Mr. and Mrs. Frank MacNeill and son Murray of Saint John are spending a two weeks pleasant holiday with Mr. MacNeill's parents Mr. and Mrs. John F. MacNeill at Cavendish.

Now that the position of the waistline in a higher sphere is recognized the neckline shows signs of similar ambition. During the period when chief concern has been with hemlines, waistlines and hiplines, it has been rather neglected, says a New York Modiste. Now models are raving in breeding, but has abandoned doing it on a large scale.

Then in town and sports clothes there is a smart tendency to button up to the throat. These collars are not high, but neat, buttoned-up effect which reveal the smooth throat collarless era. Higher necklines in daytime dresses have the added advantage that they may be dressed up with some of the new little collars, sometimes matched by cuffs, and which are one of the latest style diversions of the revised feminine era in clothes.

The marriage of Miss Craig, taken from the Auckland Star, will be of interest to many relatives and friends in this Province, the bride's mother being a cousin of Mrs. Daniel Gordon and Mrs. J. A. Messervy of this city. Miss Craig has also visited here with her parents.

A wedding of wide interest took place at St. Mary's Pro-Cathedral this afternoon when Miss Jessie Messervy Campbell Craig, daughter of Mrs. and the late Mr. J. J. Craig, of Auckland, was married to Lieutenant Maxwell Richmond, of the Royal Navy, eldest son of Mrs. H. A. Parkinson and the late Mr. Robert Richmond, of Wellington. Archbishop Averill officiated, and he was assisted by the Rev. G. R. Robson, chaplain of the Royal Navy. The church was simply but most beautifully decorated with pink gladioli and blue hydrangeas. The flowers formed an archway over the chancel, and a pale pink wedding bell was suspended over the bridal couple. Tiny posies at the ends of each pew marked the seats for the guests. The bride came down the aisle on the arm of her brother, Mr. James C. Craig. Her gown was of unusual beauty. Mounted on cameo pink marquisette the French lace was designed in silver festoons, and the simple bodice was modelled from the Victorian era. The waistline, encircled with lame ribbon was finished with an artistic bow studded in rhinestones. The uneven scalloped hemline was befrilled in ivory marquisette, giving an elongated effect. The exquisite train in cameo pink marquisette was attached to the frock at the shoulders, and was ornamented in encrustations of silver lace, the extreme tip of the train being embellished with a tiny horse-shoe and true lover's knot. Her bridal veil of old lace was worn over the face, and was arranged on the head with a headress of orange tulle in chapel effect. A beautiful shower bouquet of white flowers, with touches of pale pink, was carried. Miss Gwen Fullerton and Miss Joan Craig attended the bride as bridesmaids. They wore dainty frocks of shell pink georgette over silver lame. Insertions of silver lace were let in the skirt in a deep band around the hips, and from the shoulders right down the bodice the same insertion effect was shown. The skirts were full and finished at ankle-length in deep scallops. Large felt hats in a slightly deeper shade were worn and were trimmed with swathings of shell pink georgette. The bridesmaids carried bouquets of pink roses. Two little nieces of the bride, Valerie Craig and Tony Kinder, carried her train. They wore taffeta frocks in a shell pink shade, the little full skirts being arranged with bands of frilled lace and palest blue velvet. Short puffed sleeves completed the charming effect. Their headresses were wreaths of pale pink and blue flowers. The four attendants, in shell pink, made a most attractive retinue for the dainty bride as she came down the aisle. The bridegroom was supported by Lieutenant W. A. Dallmayer, as best man, and Sub-Lieutenant V. Thew was groomsmen. The duties of ushers were effectively carried out by Lieut.-Commander Hunter Blair, Surgeon-Lieut. Quinn, Mr. Keith Buchanan, Mr. George Toie, and Mr. Calvert Richmond. The bridal couple left the door of the church through an archway of drawn swords, and were drawn in their car by twenty-four bluejackets to "Omaha," Mountain Road, where a largely attended reception was held. Rich autumn colourings were used in the floral decorations in the drawing room, and in the dining room masses of pink chrysanthemums made the room most attractive. Mrs. Craig received her guests wearing a frock of ring velvet spotted in cherry and grey. It was draped at the side in panels, and the crossover bodice was edged in black georgette. Her hat was of black felt trimmed with black velvet, and finished with a diamond ornament. Mrs. Parkinson wore navy blue georgette with blue chenille velvet, and large navy blue velvet hat; Mrs. Kinder was in em-bossed georgette in the new cocoa shade, with brown fox furs and French felt hat to tone; Miss Richmond, black georgette and black tulle and black hat; Mrs. McQuigan, brown velvet and brown felt hat; Mrs. W. A. Phillips, fawn coloured georgette and fawn hat to tone; Mrs. James Craig, black crepe de chine, white fox furs and natter blue felt hat.
