"As soon as I get the warrant. Take one of the cars and fix up things with Ducros. What is a convenient rendezvous near the club?" "Hickham Green—behind the park. The first on the right beyond Mossford."

"The others—two cars—will be there at two o'clock. You should be with Ducros by midday, as I told him. I may look in myself during the afternoon."

"Very good, sir."

"You will be guided by developments. Don't make any formal arrest unless you have to. But don't let them go, and above all, don't use the telephone while you are there. Tell Ducros to fix that with the exchange. If there is a call, answer the phone yourself, and, if advisable, say that you're Fernandez."

"Dollimore nodded. "Stop every exit. You may easily find Cardew there. On second thoughts I will definitely be down there this afternoon. Is all that clear?"

"Yes."

"It's a case where your intelligence will come in useful. It may turn out to be bluff before we're through."

Half an hour later, Dollimore was on his way back to Mossford. He passed the lodge gates of the club which had once been an English Manor. The place seemed deserted.

Ducros was anxiously awaiting him in the little hotel and they went at once to his sitting-room on the first floor.

"What's bitten the Chief?" Ducros demanded when they were alone.

"I found out in Paris that Lewin died before his mother was murdered. Moreover, that Rolletier knew that he was dead."

The player who makes one huge jump in the bidding cannot jump again without announcing additional values. North in today's deal should have given greater thought to that point.

Behind Guarded Gates

Ducros whistled, and characteristically, slumped back into his chair. "The police are packing up here. I've just got back from letting Fernandez know that we're through with the case."

"They won't slip away this morning."

"No. I've got men at both gates of the park with instructions to detain them if they attempt to leave the place. I think he's right that the murder completely finished the place as a club. But apart from that, they're bolting. He's apparently paid for nothing and is in debt everywhere."

"The Chief thinks Miss Stenning is in the club," Dollimore said.

Ducros thought of course, "I've never searched the place," he said. "I've been into dozens of rooms, but I don't suppose I've been into them all. Still, why on earth should they detain her?"

Dollimore told him.

"I don't like it," he said. "They're far more likely to have taken the quicker way if she was dangerous. After all, why should they stick at one murder?"

"I thought about that. She may
