All That Glitters

By Frances Parkinson Keyes

She said no more about averting Beverley's departure, but began to tell him her own more slender stock of news.

CHAPTER XXX

Bob and Zoe had started home a little ahead of their original schedule. Pearl Gray and Cyril and Zallie were already installed at the Alexandria house, and exquisite order reigned.

Zoe overheard him, but she did not let him know that she had, and the next morning she insisted on going to the office with him.

"I've got a little present for you Beverley. Nothing much," Zoe indicated a box done up in gilded paper. While Beverley began to open it, hesitatingly, Zoe went on talking.

Beverley, lifting an exquisite emerald make-up kit from the shredded silk paper in which it was embedded, did not answer.

"I may as well tell you that I'm pretty selfish for being so insistent about this, Beverley. Bob's going back to Europe as soon as Congress adjourns and that means he probably won't be here more than six or eight weeks.

"Yes, Bert told me—Zoe, this kit is perfectly beautiful. But I wish you hadn't."
