HEALTH WEIGHTS

Declaring that there is direct relationship between health and weight, the Department of National Health and Welfare advises everyone to find out how they "stand on the scales of life." Depending upon one's type of body structure—height, build, etc.—there are ideal weights. The department states, further, that it is better for a young person to be overweight than underweight, but that putting on weight is a more serious matter for older people.

IN Memoriam
GARFIELD J. STEWART

Residents of East Baltic and adjacent districts received a severe shock when it became known that Garfield J. Stewart, a well-known and highly respected citizen of East Baltic, had died suddenly at Elmira, P. E. I., on Monday morning, October 24th.

He left home that morning by car for Elmira to attend to some business matter and while on his way suffered a heart attack from which he failed to recover.

It would seem that when he felt the attack coming on he had the presence of mind to shut off the motor and then made an effort to vacate the car, for when found one arm was resting on the front seat, and his knees on the running board. He was in his 68th year.

The deceased was a son of the late Isaac Stewart and Margaret Cormack, East Baltic. He was a diligent and prosperous farmer, and for many years was agent for Massey Harris farm implements, as well as district representative for Ford cars, etc.

He is survived by his wife (nee May Robertson), Red Point, and foster-daughter, Mrs. Foster Garrett, East Baltic; also by four brothers: Spencer I., Boston, who arrived by plane on Oct. 6; Percy and Stanley, Bridgeport, Connecticut.

Service was held at his late home. Rev. H. R. Bell officiated. It was one of the largest funerals ever seen in this community. Appropriate hymns used were: "There's a Land That Is Fairer Than Day"; "Go Buy Thy Sorrow"; "We Shall Reach the Summer Land By and By."

Pall-bearers were Edson Rose, Gus Whalen, Donald McAuley, Samuel MacLeod, Major Young, Nelson Stewart. Interment was at Kingsboro Cemetery.

Floral tributes were numerous and beautiful. Funeral arrangements were under the supervision of Sterling Dingwell, Sours.

safely indoors "him was one big fellow!" A very nice witch, black-robed and wearing a pointed hat, also paraded on the lawn. She was astride her broom-stick, about ready to take her flight. If Jamie and the other small visitors did not actually see her fly, they were sure that she was "jet" ready. If she had not the angular form and features of a witch she exemplified the spirit of the night, so true that Jack happening to come from the barn at the time turned out the light he carried and laughed at the two quite as heartily and involuntarily as the rest of us.

So Halloween came to the quietness of Aldie's. With no games sprited away nor other disturbing events, Jamie and the other small ones were rigged out with masks and happy-faced Jack o' Lanterns and were content to come indoors to entertain themselves with games and chatter. Karlyn brought a plate of fudge to satisfy many longings; there was store popcorn and a plate of Mr. C's Wealthies fetched from the old trees beside the house on the hill, to snack on, and then not too far from the witching hour we lunched on sandwiches and a bit of cake and read fortunes in the bottoms of our empty tea cups. All of the small ones were wide awake at parting, eyes full of wonder and surprise at the strangeness and charm of Halloween. Our youthful visitors of former years have scattered now; some to college or other various callings. One lad is working on a ranch in the foothills of The Rockies and I ought myself wondering about all of these tonight.

Blessed with continued good weather, our field work went on for the farmers. For October, the loveliest in years, is about to go. The month of continued September days. Amber Autumn ones with a haze on the fat hills and white clouds floating lazily in a blue, blue sky. A bias of glory in the trees across the face of the countryside and presently the red and the gold of them beginning to drift earward "dust; to dust". Some mornings when we came to the digging, it was clear and cold but the coldness faded in the warmth of the sun. October—month of dropping beech nuts, hunters' guns; bounds in the woodlands and patrolling hiding in the turnip patches. It brought sunlight and moon rise, stargazing in the branches of the old pine by the roadside, browning pastures—and a flurry of snow to remind one of winter. It brought so much that "Borrowed time" it is from now on for the farmers. For October, the loveliest in years, is about to go. The month of continued September days. A bias of glory in the trees across the face of the countryside and presently the red and the gold of them beginning to drift earward "dust; to dust". It brought sunlight and moon rise, stargazing in the branches of the old pine by the roadside, browning pastures—and a flurry of snow to remind one of winter. It brought so much that was delightful and lovely, that may not come again. Except in the pages of memory. October is almost gone now. And "can any good thing come out of November? Yes, many delights. But James is fidgeting and no wonder after a busy day in the field beside one of the stellar roles he played in the evening's entertaining. He commences to wind the clock. "We may" he says punctuating each turn of the key "get a few weeks of open weather yet. Ellen—but dear me" he says in alarm as he notices the hands so near together "it's never that late!"
