THE PUBLIC FORUM

THE CITY TAX LIST

Str.—Last week a writer in the Patriot protested against only a partial list of unpaid taxes being paraded in newspaper columns. Very properly, if such a publication was backed by any degree of wisdom, the list should embrace all taxpayers in default—or none.

The City Accounts of 1922 show tax arrears amounting to $12,161 of back accumulation. In 1923, real estate for the year $5,542.19; in 1924, $6,747.51; in 1925, $7,467.76; I have not exact figures of 1926 before me, but place it at the near average of $6,000; in 1927, $5,465, and in 1928, $30,000. This totals $73,391.66 of recorded arrears. Apart from this there are poll, personal, and other taxes recorded as in arrears sufficient to make the total over $100,000.

The accounts of 1927 admits collection of arrears from 1923 to 1926 of $6,180.58 and no doubt considerable other amounts are also paid; but there is nothing to show that the list as published contain anything but a very small fraction of unpaid taxes.

The list, as advertised, shows only $4,356.10 claimed to be unpaid. Over the signature of the City Collector it declares it as "Containing the names of all such defaulters." This is either fact or misrepresentation. If true—then congratulations to City financing. If not, then by what authority does the City exempt those whom they so delight to protect and honor?

The Act says they "shall" publish "all such defaulters." There is no "may" or selective permission to it. And there is no permit to any one or two men power to abrogate that law.

Then there is the element of danger in this partiality of procedure. Those who are not included in this list may produce it at any time as an evidence that they are not indebted to the City. It is an official declaration that they do not owe real estate taxes. Libel or trespass offenses are tried before non-resident jurors, not paid appointees of the City, who are liable to be more impressed by this one-sided favoritism than they are to be influenced by civic incipuity.

We know that a number of years ago $10,000 of tax arrears were written off the City Books. But that was by an open vote of the Council. It is possible that this year an infinitely larger amount has been written off—and by what authority or method. An incomplete list, not prescribed by the Act, is not lawful and would be frowned down by any legitimate court having to adjudicate upon it.

The Council meets tonight and it is their duty to correct the list by ordering the whole to be published. I am, Sir, etc.

—THREE-IN-ONE EGG — The esteemed editor of the Pioneer states in his paper that on Thursday last he was presented with an egg by one of Summerside's best known poultrymen and that "it measured 8.1-4 inches via the poles, 6.5-3 inches round the equator and weighed exactly five ounces." It now transpires that when his wife went to cook it for his Sunday breakfast she'll, which was a little on the soft side but not much, contained three perfect eggs, each quite up to normal size and each having the normal amount of yolk and white.—S

—ILLUSTRATED LECTURE — In the Salvation Army Citadel on Friday evening last, a very interesting lecture with illustrated views, was given by Major H. Cameron, Division Commander at St. John, N. B., to a large audience. Major Cameron gave some interesting facts on the life of General William Booth and of his renowned world tours and of the work of the Salvation Army in every land. Over 100 pictures were shown depicting scenes in which the founder took part, one very beautiful picture of Hyde Park, London, where an impressive gathering of the Army from all over the world took place and another of the Mansion House, London, where General Booth was presented with the freedom of the City of London, were of especial interest. Staff Captain Usarki rendered some very beautiful solos which added to the enjoyment of the evening. The lecture was in connection with the Self Denial Campaign of the Salvation Army.—S

SYDNEY, N. S. W., May 12.—To secure immediate mobilisation of skilled scientific brains of Australia in the event of war the council of the Institution of Engineers has completed a comprehensive scheme.

The chief feature is the suggested compilation by the institution and by institutes governing practitioners in other professions of register showing the qualifications of all their members and indicating the way in which their services could best be utilised. With a view of securing such records the institution proposes to send out immediately to its 3500 members forms which, filled in, will be passed on to the Department of Defence. These forms will be revised annually. The Australian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, the Australian Chemical Institute, and institutes governing professions of surveying and architecture are to be asked to send similar forms to their members. It is pointed out that in the last war, many fine technicians were sacrificed out of their proper sphere and the military authorities afterwards had difficulty in getting trained men to fill essential posts.

Not just blending—but skillful blending

IT takes years of training to distinguish in various teas the qualities which, blended together, give perfection. The tea expert must know the crops of all the famous tea gardens; the effect of the weather and the season of the year on each and every picking. Then to mix these in proper proportion is the most difficult problem of all. Perhaps that is why the flavor, fullness and strength of King Cole is so rarely found in any other tea. As you know, King Cole is unique.

Office to Be Opened In The Grecian Capital

(Special to The Guardian)

OTTAWA, Ont., May 11.—Announcement was made today by Hon. James Malcolm, Minister of Trade and Commerce, that a new trade commissioner's office would be opened in Athens, Greece, marking a closing of the gap in the chain of posts between Milan and Calcutta. L. H. H. Turcot, assistant trade commissioner in Paris, is to be promoted and transferred to the new post. The territory of the new office will for the present embrace Greece and Turkey which countries during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1928, carried on trade with Canada in excess of five million dollars.

ganda of violence which had preceded it. "Those who preached those doctrines sowed the wind and the nation reaped the whirlwind," he went on. "The general strike was a challenge to ordered government.

Headed for Anarchy

"We were heading straight for anarchy and anarchy's brother, despotism," Premier Baldwin declared.

In the seclusion of Socialist headquarters Mr. MacDonald no doubt gave advice which might be given by a member of the society of friends. MacDonald was not cut out for a Robespierre. He dislikes revolutions, as much as I do. Like me, he is a lover of the quiet places and of beautiful things. But the propaganda of violence had been spread among a people recovering from the shock of the Great War and it had done its work.

The Conservatives, Premier Baldwin went on, had not taken party advantage as they might have done, of the general strike. They might have appealed to the country on the strike's termination, but they had deliberately deferred any action until the country had become pacified.

Premier Baldwin took the Labor election manifesto and compared it with the "fiery propaganda" of the last election. The Socialists seemed to have forsaken the cult of "Gods who dwell on Etna and Vesuvius," he said.

They are now following the Gods who dwell in the shrines of Highgate and Hampstead. "I believe that the practical leaders of the Socialists in the field, as distinct from the doctrinaires of study, are learning by experience that there are some things the British people will not have at any price." Premier Baldwin declared he was not afraid of the Liberal party because "if the soul of life is not breathed into dry bones they cannot live."

Reform of the House of Lords was taken up by the Premier. The Conservatives had attempted and had failed because of the divergences of view within their own ranks. "I will only say this," Premier Baldwin continued, "when the time comes I shall be ready to put my hand once more to the plow."

NON-PERMANENT MILITIA BEST

Canadian Chief of Staff Discusses Army Matters.

TORONTO, May 11.—It is necessary for Canada to maintain a certain measure of military strength, and the most suitable type of defensive military organization for the Dominion is the non-permanent; active militia, bolstered by a nucleus of instructors and a small permanent force, declared Major-General A. G. L. MacNaughton, C.M.G., D.S.O., Chief of the Canadian General Staff, in an address here recently. He paid great tribute to the Dominion's share in promoting peace since the Armistice but contended there were forces at work in the world antipathetic to the interests of the British Empire.

"From personal observation of the officers and non-commissioned officers I am convinced we now have a thoroughly efficient and devoted corps of instructors," he said. "As far as military knowledge is concerned, we know from the reports on the individuals attending courses abroad, that they are fully up to the standard of the British regular army."

Large Expense

According to the speaker, the present peace-time military organization has an enrolment of 136,000 all ranks, with an actual strength of 51,000 of whom there were only about 34,000 trained during the past years on account of the lack of funds. He pointed out that in addition to the training that is paid for, a very large number turn out for drills and courses of instruction without expense to the public. Without this extra voluntary effort of the individual there would be little opportunity of maintaining the present strength, he declared.

Major-General MacNaughton believed the wars of the future would be fought by smaller armies than in the Great War. These armies would be more mobile. They would be supplied with greater facilities of mechanical movement and the machine warfare that would be used in all branches would create an enormous demand for highly trained and technical experts. The speaker not only felt Canada was strong in men of these requirements, but also believed her power resources were a potent factor in Empire defence through the possibility of quickly transforming industrial plants into munition manufacturing concerns.

"The measure of a country's military strength today is neither in the size of its standing army, nor in the number of trained reserves. The strength lies in its facilities for industrial mobilization," he declared.

Limited Scope

Turning to the Royal Canadian Air Force, Major-General MacNaughton pointed out that it was believed that, if the staff was confined to purely military work, there would not be sufficient scope in its activities to permit the retention of able and enthusiastic men.

"It is believed that not the least benefit from the civil flying in which the R.C.A.F. is engaged comes from the fact that the air officers are thrown in contact with the problems of the country, and are given an opportunity of making contribution to its solution," the speaker asserted.

The radio communication service which has become an important phase in military operations, naturally linked up closely with the R.C.A.F. on account of its use in forestry patrol in civil flying and observation in war manoeuvres. Consequently, the speaker informed his listeners, in 1923 the service was assigned to the Royal Canadian Corps of Signallers. In its operation the service has established a great network of stations reaching from the Atlantic up north into the Arctic Circle.

Manufacturers

tion of Canada met in Regina last year, they decided that it would be in the interests of the retail trade and the manufacturers if they knew more about each other's difficulties and problems. Mr. Crowder, as a retail druggist, suggested the idea to the manufacturers of drug store products as an experiment towards establishing better relations, and a tour was arranged last January from Toronto to Vancouver, which was very successful, large representative meetings being held in the important centres throughout the West. The plan was followed up with the present Maritime tour. The chief centres in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have been visited and the representatives have been very favorably received by the retailers. The present trip will finish at Moncton on Tuesday.

The idea, of course, is not only to create a better understanding between retail and manufacturing druggists, but other industrial lines as well. It is felt that if the retail merchants and manufacturers throughout Canada become better acquainted with each other's problems the result will be beneficial to all concerned. In the last analysis they would be able to supply Canadian customers with the various commodities made in the Dominion on the most economical basis. Full consideration will be given to supplying these commodities in the best condition, by the most direct routes and with the least possible overhead charges.

Should the present plans hold, the present delegation will be a forerunner of others from manufacturers of different lines. Groups of shoe manufacturers and clothiers may be expected to make a similar tour in the near future.

"We consider it to be in the interests of everyone," stated Mr. Crowder, "that our Canadian manufacturers get the greatest possible support in the home market. With our unlimited natural resources Canada should be a great exporting country. Yet, in the face of these opportunities, the increase alone in imports of shoes last year was greater than the total export trade in shoes for the same period. We have all the raw materials necessary for the production of shoes in Canada, and in this one line alone there are great possibilities in this country. The same is true, of course, of other industries as well. If we can establish closer contact between our retailers and manufacturers we will be assisting in putting these industries on a sounder basis, and that will be of benefit to every one concerned."

The visitors, who are registered at the Queen Hotel, were driven about the city yesterday by members of the Pharmaceutical branch of the local Retail Merchants' organization. They visited the Provincial Building and City Hall, the Harris memorial chapel, St. Peter's Cathedral, and St. Dunstan's Cathedral. In the evening they attended service at various churches in the city.

This afternoon the party will meet the druggists of the Province in the Board of Trade Rooms in a business conference. At noon they will be the guests of the Rotary Club at which Mr. Crowder will be the speaker.

Disastrous

The houses were worth from $3,000 to $10,000. The tan factory, valued at $5,000, was unoccupied.

The heroism of Miss Margaret Chapman, telephone operator, who remained at her switchboard until the last moment, plugging in all the numbers on the board, was believed to have averted a greater tragedy. Many persons barely escaped, some jumping to the ground from upper windows.

The fire apparently originated in one of two barns near the Minto Hotel and when first detected at 1.30 a. m. had spread to the adjoining residence of C. J. Chapman, where the telephone exchange was located. Miss Margaret Chapman awoke to find the window curtains of her room in flames and immediately rushed down to the switchboard. Heedless of the approaching flames she continued at her post until all the telephone numbers in town had been called. Only then did she seek refuge outside. A few minutes later the whole house was a mass of flames.

The fire fighting apparatus available was entirely inadequate to halt the conflagration, while, due to the destruction of the telephone exchange no outside assistance could be secured. Without opposition, and fanned by a fifty mile southwest gale the fire cut a devastating path 150 yards wide and a half mile long. Starting on Durham Street, it jumped from street to street and only ended with a barn on King Street when nothing else was left to consume.

Mechanization Of British Army

TORONTO, Ont., May 12.—Mechanization of the British Army which is now being tried out experimentally on a large scale, will tend to economy in maintenance charges and reduce dependence on horses, which even now do not in sufficient quantities to meet requirements of the older, established armies, according to Maj.-Gen. A. L. MacNaughton, chief of the Canadian General Staff who spoke recently.

Referring to the training of Canadian militia, the General said: "The most important thing for us Canada is to base our defense organization on what is naturally available in the country, either in men or material, so that our problems will be of adaptation rather than creation." highly scientific army, he warned listeners, needs a highly trained personnel, a large part of the training of which may best be obtained side the army itself.

The speaker concluded by observing that when the time comes for Canada to mechanize she will have great natural advantages. "Our young men are well educated," he said. "They are used to handling machinery of kinds; they do not lack initiative. And after our experience in the Canadian Corps I do not think need defer to any one in our ability to organize the work together, in operation and in a spirit of discipline."

Application For Bail Refused In Auger Case

(Special to The Guardian) OTTAWA, May 11.—On the ground that the new trial of Louis Auger, former M. P. for Prescott, had been secured on a technicality, Mr. Justice Hodgins in the Supreme Court of Ontario today refused application for bail. His Lordship in giving his decision declared he could not accede to the request as the offence of which Auger was tried drew the same maximum penalty as conviction for murder in which cases when new trials were ordered, no bail was granted. The new trial which was recent granted by the Appellate Court, Ontario will be held next October. The basis of the appeal made by Auger was on the ground of alleged misdirection and non-direction of jury by the trial judge. The judgment granting the new trial, written by Chief Justice Sir William Mulock, Justices Grant and Middleton, while Justices Hodgins and Magre dissented as the minority holding the nine years imprisonment
