Prince Edward Showing "HullaBaloo"

A sure cure for your blues started at the Prince Edward Theatre where it will remain for an engagement of two days. It's the hilarious new comedy, "HullaBaloo", packed with every form of laugh-getting trick, rich in melody, and designed as a gleam chaser that really means business.

Refreshingly new and novel in its theme, the film takes its audience behind-the-scenes in the business of staging radio programs. Here one hilarious episode after another transpires in rapid succession, with Frank Morgan and his "one man show" in the middle of the fireworks.

The plot, in brief, deals with Morgan who attempts to land himself a spot on radio. He gets one broadcast, the results of which are tragic. The sudden notoriety he wins causes his three ex-wives to descend upon him with their respective children, all in search of cash alimony. How Morgan manages to outsmart the trio, with the aid of his oldest daughter, Virginia Grey, leaves room for nary a dull moment.

Seldom has Hollywood gathered together a more capable comedy cast. Frank Morgan, as the radio comedian, surpasses any comedy role he has enjoyed in montis, and his impersonations of various famous personalities has the audience almost rolling in the aisles. Virginia Grey is attractive and personable as his daughter, and Dan Dailey, Jr. gives a capable performance as the young radio executive who falls in love with her. Ann Morriss is excellent as Dailey's fiancée.

The three wives are ably portrayed by Billie Burke, Sara Haden and Connie Gilchrist, respectively. Nydia Westman gives a top characterization as the heiress of a patent medicine fortune who narrowly escapes being Morgan's fourth wife.

Leni Lynn has her first important screen role as Morgan's youngest daughter, and displays a beautiful singing voice in her number, Stephen Foster's "I Dream of Jeanie". Little Larry Nunn, remembered for his work in "Strike Up the Band", proves himself a capable young trouper.

Rich in new faces and personalities, "HullaBaloo" features some new talent which bids fair to become important in the realm of films. Magnificent in its rendition of an ar-

WENTWORTH POSSIBLE EASTERN WINTER SPORTS CENTRE

WENTWORTH, N. S., March 3

This quaint Nova Scotian village overlooking the Wentworth Valley, one of the outstanding beauty spots of the province bids fair to become one of the winter sports centres of eastern Canada. Just recently a ski party sponsored by the Halifax Ski Club spent a week-end trying out the various ski runs that abound throughout the valley. They travelled in a special Canadian National Railways ski coach from Halifax and enroute were joined by soldiers from the military camp at Debert and by ski enthusiasts from Truro. All were high in their praise of the splendid opportunities for skiing afforded and for further development of the area as a winter sports centre for the province.

Gunshot And Vicinity

The regular card parties came to a close for the season last week, two being held in Morel early in the week. A large crowd attended a forty-five game and dance at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ephram Malone, where a goodly sum was added to the fund and on Tuesday night the final rump-up was held at the home of Mrs. Jenny McCarthy, where $25 was turned into the treasurer. Owing to the late Easter it is not expected to start parties after Easter.

Mr. Gerald McAdam, spent the weekend in the City.

Mr. John McInnis, Jr., was in the city on Saturday on business. Another Saturday visitor to the city was Vincent Coffin.

Ma Ethel Squires, Charlottetown, spent the weekend at her home in St. Peter's Harbor.

Mr. Ephram Malone was in the city last week on business.

Mr. James Arnold has returned from the city after spending some time with his daughter and son-in-law Mr. and Mrs. Hamond Godkin.

Mr. Howard Anderson, Tax Collector, was in the city last week on government business.

Mr. Ernest McEwen, was in the city last week for a couple of days where he disposed of several salmon that he had in cold storage since the season closed. Mr. McEwen reports the demand for salmon very poor is fact almost impossible to sell them at any price.

Mr. Jerome O'Brien returned Saturday from Toronto, where he was one of the instructors at the short course.

Two victims Of air crash Laid to rest

HALIFAX, March 3.—(CP)—FO. William Bird, of the Royal Air Force, was borne to the service of his long-overlooked coffin today and his old garrison city stayed the flow of its downtown traffic to make way for the Royal Canadian Air Force lorry which carried his body.

With military honors, the R.C.A.F. laid to rest one of the three men who perished 11 days ago in the crash of a military plane in the Newfoundland wilderness. Bird was the navigator.

In sharp contrast, William Smallham, of Bedford, N.S., wireless operator aboard the craft, was buried in the same city after brief civilian rites. Funeral of the third victim, Sir Frederick Banting, will be held tomorrow in Toronto.

There were no kinfolk to watch when Bird, an Englishman from Kidderminster, was lowered into the grave at Fort St. John, St. Dunlop, R.C.A.F. chaplain, but felt he should attend.

An Air Force band and the two parties escorted the lorry through Halifax streets while hundreds of civilians watched. The cap of an R.A.F. officer was placed atop the Union Jack draped over the coffin.

The firing party poured three volleys into the sky at the grave, while the band rendered "Abide With Me."

Then, as a parting gesture to a man who died in the service of his country, two Air Force bands played the March air with the Last Post.

"It's too late now," she said. "I left a letter behind at the hotel for my father telling all I know about you, and where I am going to-day, in case anything happened to me."

"Sensible girl! But why did you want to warn me?"

She moistened her dry lips, seeking a suitable reply.

"You asked me once for a second chance."

"Is that all?" He looked down at her, searchingly as they walked along. She coloured deeply, angrily. He seemed to have no shame for what she knew about him, no realization of the position at all!

He laughed suddenly and lifted his head.

"That was good champagne we had this morning, for a country pub. But you didn't seem to like it. I drank all mine drained it to the last drop. After all I thought, 'Why not drink to a thing you know will never happen?'"

She drew a deep breath, and her heart was very heavy. She asked wearily:

"You don't think I'll marry Captain Richards?"

"I don't suppose you know much about it," she said.

"I do! You'll never marry Richards!" His tone was one of flat certainty. "You don't want to marry him," she added, with a sudden harsh little laugh.

"She struggled for composure. "Is it important just now?" she managed to say at last.

"I know you're wise—but are you so wise as that?" he countered.

"I do want to marry Captain Richards!" The words burst from her, even while she realized the futile incongruity of the discussion.
