The trial of Bannerman W. Tanton, charged with uttering a forged document, was concluded before His Honour Judge Inman at Summerside yesterday morning. Mr. Heath Strong, K. C., on behalf of the accused based his argument on the contention that, before the accused could be convicted of this charge, he must be proved to have known that the document in question was actually a forgery. Mr. Strong submitted that this fact was not proven by evidence submitted on behalf of the Crown.

Mr. St. Clair Trainor, on behalf of the Attorney-General, argued that guilty knowledge of a forgery on the part of a prisoner charged with uttering a forged document is a thing which can never be directly proved, but it must be always inferred from the evidence and circumstances brought out in the particular case. Mr. Trainor submitted that the evidence produced by the Crown in this case made the inference clear, beyond any reasonable doubt, that the accused at the time he passed the document to Mrs. Taylor must have known that it was a forgery.

After renewing the evidence His Honour said that he could not find otherwise than the accused was guilty of the offence charged and must have known that the document was forged at the time he uttered it. On the evidence submitted His Honour therefore found the accused guilty of the charge. The question of sentence stands over till Tuesday next at 10.30 o'clock.

It was pointed out by counsel in the course of the argument and also by His Honour Judge Inman that the duties of the Attorney for the defence in a case of this kind played a very important function in the administration of British justice. It must not be supposed that the Attorney for the accused is conniving at it or trying to free his client from the consequences of an offence of which he may be guilty. But the high traditions of British law give to every man who is charged with an offence the right and privilege of being de-ended by a counsel, and of having the matter which is alleged against him fully investigated.
