UNCLE NED There was an old darkey and his name was Uncle Ned, And he died just a little while ago; He had no brains in the top of his head; In the place where the brains ought to grow. He sold both his shovel and his hoe; Hocked both his fiddle and the bow; And, buying four quarts of the best white mule, He's gone where the good darkeys go.

"They say he ran amuck." "How many miles would that be?"

THEY HAD TO SEE PARIS By Homer Croy

"How do you expect me ever to be anybody when you won't observe common decency? Look at Ross—he was glad to get a nice evening suit. And you want to go around looking like a farmer."

When they went out into the gardens, Pike's heart leaped at the splendid vista. Here was something that was blooming and fresh, something that was not faded and tarnished—quite the most lovely and enchanting spot he had ever seen in the world.

"This is the real thing," he breathed. "But this man-made stuff that there don't get me." And he indicated with his thumb the historic edifice.

"Don't point," commanded Mrs. Peters. "Just think," continued Mrs. Peters, in awe, "that Louis XIV and Madame Maintenon, and Louis XV and Madame Pompadour used to walk here, and then later Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette. It must have been a wonderful picture. Maybe it was right here that Louis XV said, 'After me, the deluge.'"

"Yes, and it was right back there they got Louis XVI, too," said Pike. "I'm only so small. I can't keep from seeing the other side of the picture—the poor starving people. That sticks in my craw. I've been hungry a few times myself and it didn't make me feel any too well toward the gouty crowd. Them Looe days ain't got any glory for me. I'm danged glad I'm living to-day when everybody's got a chance. And they ought to have a better and better chance all the time. Do. The more I see of Europe and the way they used to carry on over here, the more I think of America, danged if I don't."

"You're doing that loud talking again," said Mrs. Peters. They went to the Petit Trianon. The guide showed them a circle in the floor.

"Here," he explained, "are the remains of a trapdoor cut so that a table would rise, and here Louis XV with Madame Pompadour used to have dinner served to them in this room so that they could sit and eat and drink without any clothes on."

"He drew a picture meant to thrill—Louis XV with his long carefully curled hair, the beautiful Pompadour, the meals rising on the moving table, consisting of the most delicate and delicious food and rare wines to be obtained in the world, and down in the dirty, unhealthy, littered basement the great retinue of cooks and assistant cooks sweating and working. But the brilliancy and glory of the scene, as the limber-tongued guide described it, didn't touch Pike.

"I wish they'd put ground glass in his food," he said, with sudden ferocity. "Think what would happen if the President of the United States should do that to-day. Do you know what would happen? They'd get him before he got through the soup—and danged if I wouldn't be one of them. And still they say the world ain't gettin' better! I haven't any use for 'em old crockers sittin' 'olly-achin' about the good old days. There never have been such good times in the history of the world as right now. Things lack a lot of being perfect, but we're moving along in the right direction. That's the important thing. The human race is a good deal like the first car that Elwood Haynes built, in 1894. It wheezed and snorted and groaned, and all the wise birds sittin' on the rail fences along the way whooped and yelled and threw up their hats and said the thing was going to blow up. But Elwood Haynes didn't care. Every now and then he got out and hammered and patched up and climbed back into his seat again. My God! It kept running and it finally got there. That's the way with the human race. It's got more things wrong with it than Elwood Haynes' car ever thought of having, but it runs. Maybe some day, in a million years or so, we'll get there, and when we do that same old bunch of railbirds'll be sittin' there yapping about a couple of loose 'pokes."

"There you go getting excited again," said Mrs. Peters. "I wish you'd get as enthusiastic about your own personal appearance."

This subject of the dress suit followed them wherever they went. It was in the Museum of Carriage Trianon, and when they went to the Hamlet, the little imitation Swiss village where Marie Antoinette played at being a dairy maid, it was there ahead of them. And here it was that the storm broke.

The guide stopped before a charming little garden with a round top supported by pillars. Under the top was a beautiful figure of Cupid drawing at his bow and smiling at a world of riches and romance.

"This is the Temple of Love," said the guide. In these idyllic surroundings the court of Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette had walked and played and made love.

"That was what was the matter with that whole crowd—crazy about love," said Pike. "If they had had a Temple of Work or Truth or Common Sense they wouldn't have got that free ride to Paris."

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. WILLIAM MCKINLAY

By the death of Flora Stewart, widow of the late William McKinlay, removes from Breadalbane one of its oldest residents. Her parents left Scotland in the year 1840, on the voyage over Flora Stewart was born. Her parents settled at first in Little Sands, later coming to and settling in Breadalbane. From her marriage to William McKinlay, there are left to mourn the loss of a loving mother, two daughters, Mrs. Daniel Buchanan and Mrs. Adam McKenzie, and three grand-children also an aged sister, Mrs. James Warren, all of Breadalbane, besides a large circle of friends. One daughter predeceased her a number of years ago, also her husband five years ago. The deceased was in her usual health until about five weeks before the end when the doctor was called in and attended her the remaining week, but in spite of the doctor's skill and kind and tender nursing the end came on the evening of December 10, 1929, in her 89th year. Mrs. McKinlay was of a sociable nature, kind disposition. A woman of deep piety she knew her Lord and Master. The thoughts of death had no terror for her when nearing the end and knowing that it would soon come she told her pastor while visiting her that she could not find words to express her joy and happiness. She united with the Presbyterian Church early in life and continued a consistent member of that church, following it into the United Church of Canada. She was a valued member of the Woman's Missionary Society of the church, also a life member of the P. E. I. Branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

The funeral was held from the United Church, Breadalbane, on the afternoon of December 12 and was largely attended by her friends and neighbours, coming to pay their last tribute of respect. Her pastor Rev. Mr. Paltheorpe, speaking comforting words to the bereaved. He also officiated at the grave. Her remains were interred in the United Cemetery in

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION

On the evening of December 21st, 1929, a goodly number of people gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Heber MacPhail to convey to them the best wishes of the season and to do honor to Mrs. MacPhail. All being assembled the gathering, was called to order by Mr. John A. Murray who in a few well chosen words explained the object of their coming together.

Mrs. MacPhail having been called forward, an address, in behalf of those present was read to her by Mrs. Dan. MacNeil while Mrs. Helen MacPhee presented her with a well filled purse. Mrs. MacPhail replied very feelingly after which a nicely balanced program of solos by Mrs. MacPhee and Messrs. Hartz and Murray, instrumental by Miss Ina Livingstone, remarks by R. A. MacPhail, recitation by Rev. W. R. MacWalker and a story by Inspector MacPhail, was nicely carried out.

Then a most happy time was spent in games and conversation. The wants of the inner man were not forgotten and the ladies as usual on such occasions served a dainty lunch. An evening of rare good fellowship was brought to a close with a hearty sing-song of all the old favourites, ending with "Elest be the Tie" "Auld Lang Syne," "God Save the King" and a short prayer by Rev. Mr. MacWalker. Miss Ina Livingstone in her usual pleasing and capable manner presided at the piano during the evening.

Following is the address:

To Mrs. Heber MacPhail

"Dear Ethel.—The days and weeks have rolled around and once more we are in the midst of the joyous Xmas tide. It is customary at this season of the year to think of our friends and we have been thinking of you, as our presence here tonight testifies. You have endeared yourself to the people of the Clyde River Baptist Church since you have come among them as Heber's wife and you have made yourself quite indispensable by your wholehearted endeavor to promote every interest of the church. Verily you have gone about doing good. As organist of the church we know your task has not been an easy one but always you have put forth every effort to make the best use of the material at hand and it is on the very few occasions when you are absent from the service that we realize how dependent we are upon you. And so as a slight token of our appreciation of your true worth we ask you to accept this purse of money which has been so cheerfully contributed by the members and adherents of the Clyde River Baptist Church. In closing we would wish you, Heber and family a joyous Xmas and may God bless you in the coming year.

Signed on behalf of the Clyde River Baptist Church.

Says Nova Scotia Lady of Dodd's Kidney Pills

Mrs. F. H. Sampson is Very Enthusiastic About Dodd's Kidney Pills

Lower L'Ardoise, N. S., January 25.—(Special)—"As soon as I take some Dodd's Kidney Pills I get relief from my kidney trouble," writes Mrs. F. H. Sampson, who lives at this place. "One winter I had to stop work on account of my kidneys. I got six boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills. When I had finished them I could do all my work. I feel O. K. now and recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills whenever I can."

There are many symptoms which point directly to kidney trouble and warn you of a serious danger ahead. Backache, headaches and aching limbs, also loss of flesh and weight. To their direct action on the kidneys is due the wonderful success of Dodd's Kidney Pills as a relief for all disorders of the kidneys. Dodd's Kidney Pills are no cure-all. They are just an excellent kidney remedy that can be taken by old and young alike.
