time inside. And, of course, the constable was still lounging about the front gate; and the solid law was something to conjure with, against the onset of immemorial fancies.

He had no intention of ever living in this place. Neither had Sophie. A touch of humorous presence lightened the weight of things. But while they were here, probably for their last visit in company, there were certain things he wished to select for the remembrance of his father; and Sophie should see them, understand his wishes, and accept them into the scheme of her own ideas, which were to be happily realized elsewhere.

So they went within, and lit up the room, and the house looked as bright to the eye of the policeman outside as a new home, instead of the forsaken derelict it was to be.

Whichever of the curious may have seen the light from a distance, he back as from a warning beacon, but there were one or two who approached with a different concern.
One arrived at the gate, his enough, as the constable stretched his tall figure lazily upright, prior to stepping from the scene with a few words and a "Good night, good night."

"This was when Hardy bustled in upon the visitors.
"Nothing startling round this quarter, I suppose?" was his greeting.

"What more startling should there be?" Parmitter asked.

"Oh, there'll be something," rejoined Hardy. "I feel pretty sure The affair is splashed all over the country, and the papers will keep the news hot while it lasts. I have just seen Jove's wife. She is out about the streets, bubbling over poor soul, about her husband's innocence. I fancy she expects to find him in the streets, some day.
Rumours of his suicide don't interest me. But I can't think where he has been hiding, and why he don't come out for news."

"Probably he hasn't seen his evening paper yet," George suggested, grimly facetious for the moment.

Hardy saw in their faces the up-spoken desire for news, and he said:
"Read close a quick way out of it, didn't he?" he commented.

And yet he must have known he had a chance, and a good one, of escaping the murder charge. Turkey and Diggs—I mean Price, of course—say nothing, and not likely.
What I believe is that Reed's idea was to have your father, and his not quite compositious, as I don't suppose he was, that grip on the barrel might have been an attempt to prevent him from suicide. It's the robbery, puts the black look on it.
You, I know, are sure your father had no idea of suicide. Well, then, even if it was made to look otherwise, he would be prevented from ever knowing who it was that had got the charts—if that affair is to be accepted as real. However, Reed can answer for his own part. His finger-prints were on the bit of paper I got from your friend Barling. Prices are there, too. . . . my eye, what an undertaker!

Reed's were also on that note to Markham, but not on the letter to you, though the typing and the paper are from the same source.
Apart from this, I have inquired into their fraudulent acquisition of the buried stuff, since you insist that it was actually to be found." Mrs. Cordery glanced at George.

"Found? Of course it was to be found. There's never been a doubt about it. My husband—Steve Cordery—But never mind. We have been deciding to let it go."
"No, no," George contradicted;
"not in face of the chance that you may see nothing of the sort."
"If it involved the sort of doubt and trouble and calamity all over again," Hardy said, "I should feel inclined to agree with the lady. But I may as well tell you that Price and Turkey flatly deny possession of it. So I still reserve my belief."
"Naturally Price and Turkey would deny it," George said.
"They say it was not found here."
"According to George," Mrs. Cordery insisted, "it could be found nowhere else."
"Nevertheless," Hardy shrugged,
"I am rather disposed to believe them. I have a good idea when a man is lying."
"That would imply a further search," Parmitter remarked.

LEAVE FOR WEST VIRGINIA

The Rev. Lawrence Ray, pastor of the Montague Church of Christ for the past year, with Mrs. Ray left yesterday for West Virginia.
Mr. Ray has accepted a church in that state and preached his farewell sermon at Montague on Sunday. Accompanying them were Rev. S. C. Cooper, pastor of the Central Christian Church, Charlottetown and Mrs. Cooper. They are on a six weeks holiday and will visit Mrs. Cooper's mother at Louisville, Kentucky.

RETURN FROM CONVENTION

Rev. G. W. Quigley, New Glasgow, P. E. I., Rev. A. McDiarmid, St. John's, and Messrs. E. S.
Norton, Charlottetown, R. H. MacNeil, Charlottetown, and Ernest Callbeck, Linkletter, returned Monday night from Tiverton, Nova Scotia, where they attended the Maritime Convention of the Churches of Christ. The Missionary Boards of the three Maritime Provinces had been united it was announced, and hereafter the annual meeting would be held alternately in each of the three provinces. There was a possibility the 1939 convention might be in Charlottetown, it was said.

MALPEQUE UNITED CHURCH

Rev. James Ramsey, D.D., pastor of Moncton United Church, who is on his vacation at his summer cottage in Hamilton, preached very acceptably in Malpeque United Church last Sunday. Dr. Ramsey took as his subject "Behold I stand at the door and knock." Those who listened to his fine sermon could not but be impressed with such sympathetic eloquence.
The choir, in keeping with the sermon, sang the anthem "Behold I Stand at the Door and Knock" very expressively. Miss Ada Mac-Kay, Springfield, sang two solos with feeling: "Softly and Tenderly," and "My Task."

ties. They are natives of Newfoundland. The schooner had a cargo of 1600 gallons of liquor and 11,800 cigarettes on board.

Sees Britain

And France

Drifting Apart

(C. P. by Guardian's Special Wire)
LAKE COUCHING, Ont., Aug. 15—A New York professor of social research predicted today to the Canadian Institute on Economics and Politics that Great Britain and France will have to part because of a fundamental difference in their foreign policies.

Dr. Hans Simons of the New York School of Social Research, who recently concluded a tour of Europe, told the gathering of political and business leaders that "France is concerned primarily with the containing the status quo while England wants peace at almost any price and is not interested in political status quo on the 1919 basis."

The highly positive concept discernable on the European scene, Dr. Simons said, was the "agres-sive force of German expansion and the principle of German predominance." Other policies are defensive against the German policy of trying to get as much as possible.

One weakness of the Czech state on the fact its policy is rooted in two peace-time concepts—the preservation of tradition and boundaries and the protection of minorities. Czechoslovakia, suffering from rigid adherence to these two incompatible concepts, is thus the last bulwark of the 1919 settlement.

Mussolini was in Spain to build a stronger position than Britain's at Gibraltar, though the pretence was to save the country from Communist, Dr. Simons said. The Italian dictator had had the hard time explaining to his people, becoming increasingly disappointed about Ethiopia, why he gave Austria to Germany.

Mr. J. H. B. Essery, Mayor of Duval, Sask., left yesterday for home accompanied by his wife two sons and sister, Mrs. J. R.
Heppburn. Mr. Heppburn is a near relative of Premier Heppburn, of Ontario.

Mr. Eric Higgins, brother of Serg. Watson Higgins of the City Police force of Boston, Mass., leave for their homes today after spending a few days holiday in the province. Mr. Walsh is a native of Nova Scotia.

Mr. R. C. Dunbar and Mrs. Dunbar, together with their three daughters, arrived in the city yesterday by motor from Guelph, Ontario, to spend a short vacation with Mr. Dunbar's brother, W. H. W. Dunbar and Mrs. Dunbar at Kappoch Beach.
