MAN

By SYLVESTER CAIRN

"O—oh. An employee, did you say? As if he hadn't been more than that. You must be angry with him to call him that."

Elizabeth controlled herself and answered quietly.

"I would come into the library. Nesta, instead of shouting like a fishwife in the hall, I'd explain more fully. I dislike being overheard."

"Not until the door was closed did she continue.

"Mr. Ashley and I discussed certain things this morning. And we agreed it would be better for him to go."

Nesta raised her eyebrows. "I said more than I meant," Elizabeth went on, "and frankly I regretted it. So I wrote asking him to stay till the end of the month. But I was too late as he had already gone. And that's all." Then Elizabeth left the room without giving Nesta time to ask questions.

CHAPTER XVII
GONE INTO EXILE

Elizabeth lay awake that night. She felt miserable because Gerald Ashley had cheated her—and also because she had sent him away.

She sat up, pumelled her pillows, and resolved to think of something else. Her thoughts turned to Mrs. Dixon. The widow had been wonderfully brave after her husband's death, but suddenly she had seemed to give way. Her eyes were often red and she seemed to prefer to be alone with her grief. The girl respected her feelings, and was chary of intruding. Now the departure of Gerald would add to the unhappiness.

Elizabeth wondered what explanation to offer. She went down to the Dower House the following afternoon and was shown into the drawing-room, where Mrs. Dixon sat reading a letter which had just arrived. She looked vaguely at the girl, and then started as if just realizing her presence.

"Elizabeth dear, I'm puzzled. Perhaps you can explain this," and she held out the letter.

Elizabeth started at the bold, youthful writing.

"Why— isn't it Gerald's— Mr. Ashley's?"

"Read it, dear."

Elizabeth in her turn frowned over it. Gerald was saying goodbye in writing, "because goodbyes are always beastly." He added thanks for Mrs. Dixon's kind words for him.

"Please don't think me ungrateful. I'll never forget all you and Mr. Dixon did for me." He merely stated the fact he was leaving and gave no explanation.

"I'd no idea he was thinking of going," Mrs. Dixon looked at her questioningly.

"He always doubted whether he was up to the work," began Elizabeth glibly, "and he wasn't."

"Oh Elizabeth," Mrs. Dixon was reproachful. "And he worked so hard and now— she began to cry quietly. "Poor poor Gerald! What will he do? Oh, you couldn't have been so kind if you'd known all it meant to him— you'd seen him as we did. He'll never stand it."

Elizabeth was nettled at the assumption that she had been so unkindly to her, and answered quickly.

"But how could I keep him on when he— he— It was hard to justify herself without giving him away, and she stopped.

"What brought matters to a head?" Mrs. Dixon was gravely judicial. "Couldn't he have learned?"

Elizabeth had not expected to be blamed, and was resentful.

"I didn't like his way of keeping accounts. I like to be able to understand all that's being done." She spoke deliberately.

"Couldn't he have changed his method—or explained it to you?"

"He never suggested it," Elizabeth breathed more freely. "A definite clash over a specific thing was sufficient excuse. At the worst it made Gerald out to be obstinate and disoblige."

"Surely he could have explained what puzzled you," insisted Mrs. Dixon.

"I do," and Elizabeth, self-controlled Elizabeth, nearly choked.

"Listen," Mrs. Dixon spoke sharply to an excited child. "Control your self—and tell me just what you mean."

Elizabeth had revealed more than she intended, but it had been so hard to be blamed for everything. She steeled her voice.

Foster-MacKay Wedding

Banks of lovely summer flowers provided the setting for the wedding of Elizabeth Jane MacKay, eldest daughter of Mrs. MacKay and the late Mr. MacKay Mt. Stewart, and Clarence Winfield Excel Foster, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. L.H.D. Foster, Marshfield, in St. Columbia Presbyterian Church, Marshfield, Friday, August 22, at 7 p.m. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. C. MacNeil B.A., B.D.

The bride given in marriage by her brother Mr. Sterling MacKay, was charming in a floor length gown of white embroidered organza over taffeta, styled with fitted bodice full skirt and matching velvet jacket. Her long bridal veil was caught at the top with a cluster of orange blossoms. She carried a pair of white satin roses.

Her only piece of jewellery was a necklace of pearls.

Misses Florence and Alice MacKay, sisters of the bride, acted as maid of honor and bridesmaid respectively. They wore dresses of silk net over taffeta, with fitted bodices, puff sleeves, and wide skirts. The maid of honour was dressed in blue, and carried a nosegay of shaded blue sweetpeas. The bridesmaid was dressed in pink, and carried a nosegay of shaded, pink sweetpeas. Both sisters wore picture hats in shades of blue and pink.

The bride's mother was gowned in navy blue crepe with white accessories and corsage of roses. The groom's mother wore brown crepe with white accessories and corsage of roses.

The best man was Pilot Officer Richard J. Twomey of the R.A.F., now stationed at the R.A.F. Reconnaissance School, Charlottetown. Messrs Earl and Talmadge Foster, brothers of the groom, were the ushers.

Miss Dorothy McFarlane played the wedding music, and during the signing of the register Mrs. Bruce McLaren, Charlottetown, cousin of the bride, sang "O Promise Me".

After the ceremony a wedding supper was served to about thirty guests at the home of the bride's

Dorothy Dix Says—

IN-LAWS CAN LIVE TOGETHER IF THEY ARE DIPLOMATIC

Utmost Tact Must Be Practiced And Never Should The Parents Adopt The Attitude Of Bossism

Dear Miss Dix—When our daughter, who is our only child, married, she and her husband set up their own little home, as we all felt that was the best thing for the into do and we wanted to avoid all in-law trouble.

We are people in comfortable circumstances, and both she and I did our own housework. Finally we decided that we would pool our resources and build a house and live together. We did this 10 years ago and the plan has worked out most successfully. We have the pleasure of living in our own house and find it cheaper than paying two rents. We divide the housework and that makes it easier on both of us. My daughter is the housekeeper and I keep out of the kitchen. But I help with the children and look out for the babies at night when the young folks want to go out and be with their friends and forget the grind of making buckles and tongue me!

In addition, we have the joy of living with youth and can have many luxuries that we could never have dreamed of with the old set-up. We do not inflict ourselves too much on our children. We realize that a young couple want to be by themselves at times. And when they have company we stay in our own part of the house. We have our reading, the radio and our hobbies, and they keep us entertained and out of other people's way. What we have done, any old people could do, and they could be a help to their children instead of a curse to them.

SUCCESSFUL IN-LAWS.

ANSWER—I commend this woman's letter to the consideration of the multitude of women who are confronted with the mother-in-law problem, for the writer offers a sane way of solving it, providing, of course, that the mother-in-law is of the stuff of which diplomats and guardian angels are made. And these are about as scarce as hens' teeth when you come down to counting them.

Can Be Good Arrangement

Undoubtedly when parents and their married children can live together in peace and harmony it is an admirable arrangement. It is good economy, for the overhead expense for two families is not much more than for one. Nor is the food bill doubled.

Also, the housework is much lighter when two women halve it instead of its falling on one. And it certainly frees the young woman of much of the care of her children when Mother is there to look after them. So many and so great are the advantages of the two families living together that one might think that for the sake of the perquisites that they might put up with the drawbacks.

Unfortunately, however, such is seldom the case, because nature is against the plan. Part of the urge toward marriage for every young couple is the desire to have their own home in which they can do as they please. And this they can never have if mother and father are equal partners in it.

Tact Must Be Observed

The young couple may have invested just as much money in the home as the old couple did, but father and mother will feel that it is theirs and that they have a right to boss it. It is the force of habit, for parents who live with their children never realize that they have grown up. Tom and Mary are still little toddlers in rompers to them, no matter how old they are.

Undoubtedly, if women could be found like the one who writes this letter—who sticks to her own knitting instead of putting her fingers in her daughter's pies, who realizes that not even her own child wants her underfoot all the time and who has her own interests instead of depending upon her daughter for all her entertainment and amusement—it would be a fine thing for in-laws to live together.

But, alas, such paragons are rare, and until the day comes when the lion and the lamb shall lie down together it is going to be a risky experiment to try.

Don't Run Away

Dear Dorothy Dix—I am 13 years old and very beautiful and I want to join the movies, but my parents won't give their consent. Would you advise me to run away and go to California or stay at home and grieve it out?

ANSWER—My dear child, I earnestly advise you to stay at home, where you have three square meals a day and a good bed to sleep in and somebody to provide you with clothes. Because if you run off to California you will have none of these. You will walk the streets of Hollywood, footsore and weary and frightened, until some policeman arrests you and they telegraph home to your father to come and get you. Or some worse fate may befall you.

In the first place, my silly little child, it takes a lot of money to go to Hollywood, and you probably haven't the price of a railroad ticket to go 50 miles. And, in the second place, they don't want you at Hollywood.

Quit thinking about being a movie queen and devote yourself to getting an education. Don't think about running away from home. That would mean certain ruin to you. After you are grown up and your beauty has developed there will be plenty of time for trying to get into the movies.

Your Individual HOROSCOPE

By Frances Drake

For Tuesday, September 9th
MARCH 21 to APRIL 20 (Aries)—Be especially careful in managing the financial end of your business and other affairs. Avoid unnecessary errors through haste. Late afternoon and evening favorable for personal interests, entertainment, research, study, conferences.

APRIL 21 to MAY 20 (Taurus)—You should find today's influences kind to all earnest and intelligent efforts. Financial gains offered in business, industry, mechanics, engineering, improving machinery, equipment and other urgent commodities.

MAY 21 to JUNE 20 (Gemini)—Your attitude and general reactions to orders, necessary work and other duties will determine the kind and amount of success you have. It will pay to cooperate cheerfully with employer, associates government family.

JUNE 21 to JULY 20 (Cancer)—Friendly results will obtain from the right kind of endeavor today. You may not find everything running smoothly but profits are in the bag for you who show initiative and persistency.

JULY 21 to AUGUST 20 (Leo)—More favorable for general advancement and improvements than for personal gains or aggrandizement. Intelligent planning and management essential for best results.

AUGUST 21 to SEPTEMBER 20 (Virgo)—Be conservative and re-trench during early part of day. Indications for success in all worthy undertakings increase shortly after the noon hour. Especially favored: Public welfare, government interests, expansive and humane projects.

SEPTEMBER 21 to OCTOBER 20 (Libra)—Excellent opportunity for you to display that fine gift of sound judgment with which you are endowed. Full steam ahead! Try the new and difficult tasks or clients.

OCTOBER 21 to NOVEMBER 20 (Scorpio)—Self-restraint and patience are requisites this tricky day. Unexpected achievement and benefits are likely, however, if you throw the full weight of your ability and ingenuity into your activities. Be diplomatic.

NOVEMBER 21 to DECEMBER 20 (Sagittarius)—Matters of a general character in which the public's good is concerned, business tending to secure your future and dealing in consumers' commodities are first in favor. Selfish interests will find it hard sledding.

DECEMBER 21 to JANUARY 20 (Capricorn)—Your usual routine and familiar affairs, necessary duties and progressive useful matters will be easier to manage than unknown necessary projects. Don't be discouraged at any time. Better to try and fail than not to try at all.

JANUARY 21 to FEBRUARY 20 (Aquarius)—If you find it a bit difficult to get started at matters grip and carry on just the same. Star aspects improve greatly after 1 p.m., especially for mental work
