am glad Winthrop has shown that he can live within his means when he wants to; in fact, that he can live below when he has to. "Had he done that this winter, he could have saved $5,000. As it is, you had to save only to pay it back for your winter's extravagance. "I must say I blame Connie. Most of the bills I paid were for dresses for her, and repairs on her car. I always thought she drove too fast, and that of course, puts a car in bad condition. "But I never drove it," I exclaimed when I read this. "You had it most of the time." "Well, you can't expect mother to understand," Win said cheerfully. She does give it to you though. "Other bills were for entertaining. As far as I can see, they were for French cooks to make fancy dishes for parties. Why couldn't you have had people in on the party as she used to have? She has two maids; I should think in one of them, at least, could cook a dinner." I did not finish the letter. After all, what was the use? She could not understand. Nor could Winthrop.

Killed His Nagging Wife

Bridgeport, Conn., Aug. 15.—Mrs. Stephen Pellath seventy-two years old, today paid with her life for "nagging" her husband seventy when he dunned her for 50 cents to get a shave. Her skull was fractured yesterday when her husband attacked her with an axe. He explained to the police his difficulty in obtaining money for the barber had caused him to lose his temper. The Pellaths had been married forty-four years. Stoop-shouldered by the burden of years, walking with faltering steps the whitened old man stepped from the kitchen of his home by the police. On a cot in his cell with tears streaming from his eyes the police say, he told of the quarrel. Pellath said according to them that after dinner he asked his wife for 50 cents that he might get shaved. She upbraided him in a shrill voice. He said he begged her to stop "nagging" offering to forego the 50 cents. She paid no heed, he said talking as she cleared away the dishes until he could bear it no longer. Then he says, besides him- self he seized a long handle axe and struck her several times. The wife's screams drew the neighbors. He went out walked around the block and having nowhere else to go went home. Police took him away. In court today Pellath was held without bond for a hearing.

MRS. COFFMAN ILL SEVEN YEARS

Sidell, Ill.—"I was a nervous wreck. I was suffering from a pain in my left side, which was almost unbearable, and I could not even let the bed clothing rest on my body at night. I had been sick for seven years, but not so bad until the last eighteen months, and had become so weak that I could not get up for anybody, and I could not do my work without help, and the doctors told me that an operation was all there was left. I would not consent to that, so my husband brought me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and begged me to take it. I have taken fourteen bottles of it and I feel ten years younger. Life is full of hope. I do all my household work and had a large garden this year. I never will be without the Vegetable Compound in the house, and when my two little girls reach womanhood I intend to teach them to take it. I am never too busy to tell some suffering sister of my help, and you can use my name and address to read the good news. Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines."—Mrs. IDAM. COFFMAN, R. B. 2, Sidell, Ill.

"I drew down our bank account check for my commission which to a few dollars. That with the check for my commissions they gave me today, makes up the money I owe. I sent mother my check for the whole amount today. And I asked her to lend me enough to buy the partnership in the firm. She said she would do it if I provided I could live economically and get out of debt. I think I have done so in a remarkably short time." I said nothing to this. There was not a word on his part about the share I had in it. Indeed, the whole thing was so plain—he remembered that only when it made him uncomfortable to live in the country. Then it was my fault. "I hope mother will write a decent letter now," he ended. "This summer has been awful. Mother can be trying when she wants, and she has been off of me ever since she found out about the bills." But mother's letter was not "decent" according to Winthrop's views. "I hereby acknowledge your check," she began, making the letter read like a printed receipt.

"THE LOVE PENDULUM"

BY MARION RUBINCAM HIS MOTHER'S LETTER

Chapter 52 For a long time it seemed that everything we said, everything we did, only drove deeper the wedge that was separating Winthrop and myself. As I looked back over our year of married life and our but little more than a year of friendship, it seemed to me that our love had swung like a pendulum, far out on one side where there was love and passion and tenderness and comradeship—and now far out to the other where there was none of these qualities. At least, this seemed true of Winthrop's part. I wondered what the end of this meant, and brooded over it. Did all marriages begin that way—with everything to make them beautiful at the start, yet nothing lasting to make them sweet at the end? Did not most people swing through this emotional arc, and end at a dead level between the two like the hanging, quiet pendulum of a clock that has stopped. "Wasn't that awful dead level even worse than an active dislike?" The more I thought about it, the more hopeless the whole outlook became. For, after all, Winthrop and I were so totally unlike! And we did not know it at the start—how could we? We scarcely knew each other at all. To him, I represented everything he wanted—a pretty woman, well dressed, with the smooth manners of the city bred girl, with a certain social position, with a background of frivolity. To me, he represented everything I wanted—a strong, quiet man, sincere because he knew nothing of the suavity of the city-bred man, living among people who were simple and sincere too, in a place where there was time to rest and to be at ease, and leisure to cultivate real friends instead of feverish acquaintances. I remembered the long afternoons of the summer before when half a dozen of the girls in Winthrop's village gathered around my tea table and we sat and worked and talked and learned to know each other. How different from the meetings of the winter—ten minutes' chat or superficial subjects at a crowded reception, empty flattery as one stood at a "tea" of scraps of talk between the acts of a play or sweet conversation as was possible, while we danced to the music of jazz music.

I had made no friends in the country this summer, but I had re-created my friendship with Colin with Lorna—a little writer with half a dozen of Colin's friends and I had found in my old friend, Ned, a qualities I never dreamed existed. Otherwise we had no guests. Winthrop would not invite our "smart" friends out to our tiny house.

The night we quarreled Winthrop came to me in the evening, after Colin had gone to bed. We were alone. "I want you to see to take little interest in my business or in my affairs or in myself," he began in a very dignified manner. "I still think I had better tell you that the commission will finish paying what I owe my mother." "I'm glad of that," I looked up and smiled. I was very glad. "I drew down our bank account check for my commission which to a few dollars. That with the check for my commissions they gave me today, makes up the money I owe. I sent mother my check for the whole amount today. And I asked her to lend me enough to buy the partnership in the firm. She said she would do it if I provided I could live economically and get out of debt. I think I have done so in a remarkably short time."
