LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION MAKES SPLENDID SPEECH ON THE BUDGET

Mr. J. D. Stewart, K.C., in a Clever, Analytical Address Shows Up the Weakness and Inconsistency of the Bell Government and Proves from Their Platform and Promises How They Have Failed to Keep Faith With the Electors.

In the Provincial Legislature on Tuesday evening (April 11) Mr. J. D. Stewart, Leader of the Opposition, replying to the Budget Speech of Premier Bell, spoke as follows:

Mr. Speaker: It affords me very much pleasure to offer my congratulations to the Hon. Leader of the Government in the heroic effort which he has just made to make the worse appear the better cause to justify his administration during the time he has been in power and particularly during the past year. I would also congratulate him and agree with what he says with regard to the beauty and natural resources of this province, but I note he is speaking of it as a resort for tourists and its future with regard to that. He says he expects they will bring a large amount of wealth with them, and will leave little behind them. I think he must have it in mind to invent some new form of taxation by which he will be able to tax the tourists to death in the same way he did the people of this province. He says: "We are not going to look back, we are going to commence with the present administration and deal with it during the past three years." I can see a very good reason why that hon. gentleman does not care to go back to the beginning of his own administration. Previous to that time, for a number of years he was Leader of the Opposition in this House, and the Leader of the Opposition had a certain record with regard to promises made and with respect to inducements held out. He would very much rather forget those now, for the simple reason that they are not consistent . and they do not measure up to his performance during the past three years since he came into power. I think it was my hon. friend whom I remember on the floor of this House making a reference to the Mythological god Janus. The god Janus was one of the gods of the ancient Romans, as you know, Sir, and was represented by a man with two faces, and I often think how apt that reference was, as coming from the lips of my hon. friend and how fully the policy of my hon. friend in Opposition and in Power typifies that god. So much so that it seems to me that my hon. friend might very well be termed the High Priest of the god Janus.

Two Faces.

Will you permit me just to draw a picture in a poor way of the two faces typified by the first face of the god, as represented by the policy in Opposition; and it is the face of a man who represents himself as a public benefactor—a man who is ready to hold up his hands in holy horror at taxing the people, at the extravagance or waste of public money—the face of one inviting the people to put confidence in him and trust in him and he will lead them into the Promised Land; in short, the face of a political philanthropist, and our all elect bears a smile so winning, so angelic that one has the uncomfortable sensation that after all it is only a mask. That is the face as is represented by the actions of my hon. friend and his party when in Opposition. But there was an election in 1919, and they were placed in the seats of the mighty, and then we see the head of the god turned, and we see the other face. And first we see a face expressive of stupefaction, of horror—the face of one who is caught in the net which he has laid for another, and does not know how to extricate himself. The expression turns to one of very deep study, as he is studying and considering how he will succeed in extricating himself from the difficulty in which he is placed. And finally we have the face of one who has solved the difficulty—a face of almost malign cunning of a man who has worked out a plan whereby he can throw off this incubus of deception and mis-representation on the shoulders of another after all, and get away free. Let me apply that. In order to do so, I must go back into history. I must go back to the days when my hon. friend and his followers were in Opposition; back to the year 1915. I think that was the first session of my hon. friend's second coming into this Legislature when he became leader of the Opposition, and from that time onward up to 1919 the policy of my hon. friend and his followers in Opposition is well known—so well known it is, to the sorrow of the people of this province, that it is scarcely necessary for me to mention it. The policy they preached was: "There is enough revenue, if it were used with economy." My hon. friend, the senior member for West River, in a few words stated they had all been preaching when he said: "They've taxed the horses and the dogs; they have taxed the land and income; they have taxed everything, and they have increased subsidies, and what are they doing with the money?" So that they were leading people to believe during all that time that there was ample money, more than sufficient, that the people were being over-taxed and the money being squeezed out of them and squandered. Then there was the cry of money being wasted.

A Party Slogan.

Their slogan was expressed in their public press in that famous phrase: "The slash-away, dash-away, spend the cash Government." That was their slogan. But my hon. friend will say, "Some of my followers may have said that; my press may have said that, but that doesn't bind the party. I am the one and only oracle of the Liberal Party. Unless I say it, it doesn't bind me or bind the party." Many things have happened since that that would make you doubt the correctness of that statement. Just whether he is the master he pretends to be or not, or whether or not the body controls the head, is doubtful. However, be that as it may, that was the position he took. And he went so far as almost to discredit some of those gentlemen who are in his ministry, in his cabinet. I will just illustrate that. My hon. friend from West River, to whom already reference was made in the debate on the address in 1919 said this: "They could afford to pay the teachers proper wages; there was plenty of money if it were used with economy and good management." What does that mean? That was spoken a few months before the election of 1919 when it was known just what the teachers' demands were, when the teachers were almost then on the verge of a strike, when their requirements as to salary were known and when the amount of money was known or should have been known to those hon. gentlemen in order to make up proper salaries for the teachers. And he says there was plenty of money for that if it were used with economy and good management, that is with the revenue the Government had at the time and without any additional taxes.

Broken Promises.

The Leader of the Government a few days ago said that if any man claimed that $75,000.00 could be raised for teachers' salaries without additional taxation, such a man wasn't a responsible member of the House. There we have the two statements side by side, and what conclusion do you come to when you place the one beside the other? $75,000.00 is the amount that was necessary or about what was necessary to pay the teachers the additional salaries. My hon. friend the Leader of the House, says, "Any gentleman who will say that could be raised without additional taxation is not a responsible member of the House." The member from West River said in 1919 that it was possible. What conclusion can you draw as to the opinion of the Leader of the Government of the member from West River?

Mr. Bell: Conditions have changed.

Mr. Stewart: You were speaking of the conditions as they were then. My hon. friend, the Leader of the Government denies responsibility for any of those propositions which have been put forth unless he has put them forth himself. Take him on his own ground. One thing he has said, he has placed on the records of this House as part of his platform, that he would make revenue and expenditure meet. Take that in conjunction with his statements during the time he was in Opposition; that the expenditures were too large and that the people were burdened with taxes and that our claims at Ottawa should be pressed. And what conclusion can you draw, what conclusion can any member of this House draw; what conclusion can the intelligent people of this province draw from that statement? That additional taxation was necessary? Is that the conclusion that we would draw; and that after taxing everything tangible and intangible, everything in sight, still there would be an increase in the liabilities of this province in one year of over $150,000? And that is what has happened. Now then, we have the condition of affairs up to the election. That was their policy; those were the statements they made on the floor of this House; those were the propositions which they held out to the people of this province and not only on the floor of the House during those four years, but also to a great extent during the election campaign of 1919. They won the election of 1919 upon that policy—that there was no need of more revenue, that revenue and expenditure could be made to meet by practicing economy.

Additional Revenue.

They were placed, as I have said, in the seats of the mighty; and then they began to look about them and see just where they stood and what they had to face, whether they could carry out this policy which they had preached when in Opposition to make revenue and expenditure meet by economy. I have said they looked about to see if they could do this. Perhaps I am wrong in that. They knew very well they couldn't do it, but they had to look about for a means of escape. They saw that they had to find additional revenue. They were advised, my hon. friend says, to go back to the people and to refer the whole matter to the people; and they boast of their courage. That would have been the courageous course, but that would not suit their programs. They had acquired power by any methods without consideration of results, and they did not intend now to surrender it. They had to find sufficient revenues to make themselves and their friends comfortable. But they had to find some plausible excuse to offer to the people for raising such revenues. They intended to tax the people, but they must first jusitfy their double-faced policy in some way. Then it was that the old wily politician came to their rescue and propounded a scheme, and it was this: We will terrify the electors, so that they will forget our pre-election promises; and we will do it by piling up a fictitious deficit. We will pile up a deficit so high that it will terrify the people, and we will say: "Look what the Conservatives were behind when in power—$254,000, in eight months. We didn't know that before; this is news to us; we have to raise revenue; we can't carry on the affairs of the province in the face of such conditions; we have been deceived." And that nothwithstanding the fact that they had always preached that our accounts were not correct, that we were making a deficit, and that we were increasing the debt of the province every year, and that our debt was much larger than represented by our accounts, that even our Auditor and our External Auditor had not been furnished with proper statements and that in consequence their statements were not correct. But notwithstanding that, they said, "We will build up this deficit, and how will we do it? Well, there is the half yearly subsidy coming from Ottawa. It's true that the Conservative Government carried on for the greater part of the year, and they have furnished supplies and things so that this Government may carry on with very little expenditure for the remainder of the year, but nevertheless we will charge the Government back with a certain proportion of that subsidy which they have actually expended and we will charge them back with $116,000 of that subsidy. That will supply some of the deficit that we are going to build up. That isn't large enough. That will not furnish us with the excuse we want. Well, now, how can we build it larger? There are the taxes. The taxes for this year are yearly taxes and they are intended to cover expenditure for the whole year, but they haven't yet been collected; they are not due until the month of November; we will not collect them; we'll leave them outstanding until next year, and that will make another large reduction in the revenue and a correspondingly large deficit." And so they left uncollected from that year, as since appears, something over $175,000 of that year's revenue. And if you add the $116,000 and the $175,000, you will have a good deal more than the deficit they proclaimed. However, the $254,000 was the amount they made up for us at that time, and they considered that quite sufficient for the purpose; and so they found the excuse for not going back to the people and submitting their taxation policy; they found an easier way. Although they boast of their courage, they found an easier way of getting through, and putting on the taxes and fixing the revenue that would make them very comfortable in their seats for four years at the expense of the people.

Fictitious Deficit.

Resuming the debate on the budget in the Legislature Wednesday evening, Mr. J. D. Stewart said:

Mr. Speaker, when I moved the adjournment of the debate I was dealing with the matter of the fictitious deficit which had been built up by my hon. friend and his followers immediately after the election in 1919. After they had been elected to power an hysterical effort was made to make good their misrepresentations to the people upon which they had been elected, and to lay the foundation for a raising of the revenues which was necessary in order to fit themselves out and to make themselves as comfortable as possible in the seats which they had just acquired. I have only a word or two to say on this subject, and it is this: It has been the practice in this province for very many years past, upon a change of government, for the incoming government, before they actually take the reins of power, to have an audit of the finances of the province made by an outside independent auditor. The value of this can be readily seen. It is in the interests of the incoming government itself, if that government means well and if its intentions are honorable and straightforward; because if they propose to legislate and carry on in the interests of the province it is of essential importance to them that they should have such an audit in order to put themselves right with the people at the very start. It is important also to the outgoing government, so that no dispute may arise as to the responsibility of any expenditure. But most of all is it important to the people of the province, who have a right to know just where the credit or blame should lie in matters of this kind. This attitude was taken by the Hon. Frederick Peters when he obtained the reins of power and the same stand was taken when the Conservative administration took power in 1911. We would therefore have a right to expect, and the people of the province have a right to expect, when my hon. friend took charge in 1911 that he would follow this precedent so well laid down by his predecessors.

Stacking a Deficit.

The records show, however, that he did not do this. We can only assume that he did not do it because it did not suit his purpose and because some other course did suit his purpose better. What did he do? We have his own story about it, and it is a most extraordinary one. He says he went to the office of the Commissioner of Public Works, and that he measured the size of the pile of checks he found there! This is indeed a most extraordinary way of ascertaining the financial condition of the province. What would we think of a bank manager who attempted to ascertain the financial condition of his bank by measuring the pile of checks he had in the vaults? Yet this is precisely what my hon. friend says he did. He goes on to describe even the size of the pile. Further than that, he says he went to the public auditors and he put certain questions to them. We do not know what these questions were, but we may assume that a gentleman so astute in politics as my hon. friend would certainly put the questions that would elicit the answers that would serve his own purpose best. And from these two things—the measurement of a pile of checks, and some sly questions to the auditors—was born this famous "deficit." This wonderful "deficit" of $253,000 or thereabouts was simply made up, as I have stated, for the purpose of deceiving the people; of unloading the surplus debt which they should have borne on their own shoulders, and of enabling them to tax everything in sight in this province.

Bad Habits.

Habits of deceiving people, when once acquired, either by a government or an individual, are very hard to throw off. During the last campaign my hon. friend and his followers had practiced such habits. After they got into power they continued them as is evidenced by the creation of this "deficit" and they have continued them right up to the present day, because we have the evidence of it with respect to the public highways when they claim that an amount can be added to the debt of this province and yet it will not cost anything to pay it off.

CARELESS SHAMPOOING SPOILS THE HAIR

If you want to keep your hair looking its best, be careful what you wash it with. Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else that contains too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just plain Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than anything else you can use.

Two or three teaspoonfuls of Mulsified in a cup or glass with a little warm water, is sufficient to cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather which rinses out easily removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excess oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get Mulsifed cocoanut oil shampoo at any pharmacy, it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months. Be sure you get Mulsified. Beware of imitations. Look for the name Watkins on the package.
